The objective of the European Migration Network (EMN) is to provide up-to-date, objective, reliable and comparable information on migration and asylum to Community Institutions, Member States’ authorities and institutions, and the general public, with a view to supporting policy-making in the European Union in these areas.
Preface

The opinions expressed in this study are those of the authors. They do not necessarily reflect the positions of the Luxembourg Ministry of Family and Integration or the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

This study was drawn up by the members of the National Contact Point Luxembourg of the European Migration Network (EMN NCP LU) under the responsibility and coordination of Christel Baltes-Löhr and Anne Koch-University of Luxembourg- with the continued support of Sylvain Besch, CEFIS - Centre d'Etude et de Formation Interculturelles et Sociales; Claudia Hartmann-Hirsch, CEPS/Instead ; Germaine Thill, STATEC; Sylvie Prommenschenkel, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Marc Hayot, Luxembourg Reception and Integration Agency, Ministry for Family Affairs and Integration. In this study, the EMN NCP LU attempts to provide, as far as possible, an overview of existing approaches, mechanisms and measures implemented in Luxembourg in order to address irregular migration.

The analysis of different governmental programmes has shown that the fight against irregular migration has gradually become a priority on policy level over the last decade. As a matter of fact, for national authorities the fight against irregular migration is one part of a general immigration policy. Addressing irregular migration thus goes hand-in-hand with the promotion of legal migration in accordance with labour force requirements of the economic activity sectors. In this sense, national policy largely follows the guiding lines of European policy on the subject. This latest assertion is equally reflected by the transposition of two main EU directives relating to irregular migration into national law, in particular the “return” directive\(^1\) and the "sanctions"\(^2\) directive.

On the other hand, the national legislation remains nevertheless the reflection of national political wills. Beyond the transpositions of Community law, it can be observed that the national legislative framework can and has been adapted as a response to a particular situation. Faced with pressures exerted by several associations which argue for the rights of foreigners, national authorities have stipulated pathways out of irregularity. Even if these provisions are considered widely ineffective by the associations, they are nonetheless enshrined in national law.

As for concrete measures that are in place in order to contain irregular migration, they vary in range and type. They range from readmission agreements that have been negotiated at the European level, bilateral political contacts, to information programmes in place in countries of origin, the strengthening of border controls through specific training of officials and the adaptation of technological innovations, international cooperation such as in the context of FRONTEX, to the construction of a new detention centre and even the promotion of voluntary returns in cooperation with IOM.

Although it is quite easy to draw up an overview of European and national policies and legislative frameworks, it is much more complex to quantify the phenomenon of irregular migration as such. This difficulty exists principally for two reasons: Firstly, "irregular" migration is by definition difficult to quantify - a migrant who is in an irregular situation wishes on principle to have as little contact possible with national authorities for fear of potential consequences – and secondly, data collection with regard to irregular migration at the national level is undertaken by different authorities according to their administrative requirements. We nonetheless attempt to provide a summary picture based on few available figures in the latter part of the study. It can be observed that irregular migration accounts for only a small part of migratory flows and immigration reality in Luxembourg.

1. INTRODUCTION: OBJECTIVES, METHODOLOGY AND DEFINITIONS

1.1. Objectives

The European Migration Network (EMN) Steering Board approved the selection of a study on Practical responses to irregular migration as part of the EMN Work Programme 2011. The overall objective of the study is to provide an overview of existing approaches, mechanisms and measures implemented by Member States\(^3\) to address irregular migration in the EU.

The specific aims of the study are to:

- Examine the overall historical and political approaches towards irregular migration in the Member States;
- Outline the EU and national policy and legal frameworks with regard to preventing, detecting, addressing and reducing irregular migration, and their drivers; Provide a comprehensive overview of practical approaches, mechanisms and measures developed by the Member States to reduce the number of irregular migrants in the EU;
- Review transnational cooperation in the area of irregular migration;
- Explore the availability of data and the methods of data collection used by Member States to estimate the irregular migrant population and the costs of implementing practical measures to tackle irregular migration;
- Explore the effects of EU policy and legislation on national policy, procedures and practices;
- Draw conclusions about the effectiveness of the practical responses to irregular migration across Member States, including proportionality considerations and the highlighting of best practice.

In particular, the study will identify effective practical measures undertaken to:

- Address irregular migration before the migrant arrives in the host (Member) State – i.e. at pre-entry level;
- Detect the entry of irregular migrants onto Member State territory;

\(^3\) Norway will also participate in this EMN study and for the purpose of these specifications is considered as a Member State.
Monitor and ensure migrant compliance with the respective conditions of their visa and/or other permission to stay in a Member State in order to avoid overstay; and

Address the (legal) situation of irregular migrants by providing ways out of irregularity.

- The study will focus on the following groups of third-country nationals found to be illegally present in Luxembourg: Persons entered on the territory illegally (for example clandestinely, by using if necessary false documents or by giving a false indication as regards the purpose of their stay);
- Persons who have exceeded the validity duration of their visa (or the duration of the maximum period of stay authorised in case of exemption of visa);
- Persons who no longer have the right to stay, because they no longer have a valid residence permit and their residence permit is no longer extended or has been withdrawn;
- Persons without the right to stay who have not left the territory of the Member States following a (final) negative decision on their application for international protection;
- Persons who, having submitted an application for international protection, have "disappeared" and have no longer presented themselves to the authorities during the procedure for examination of the application for international protection, and who have not left the Member State/EU.

The study will not focus on victims of human trafficking or on the practical measures to combat trafficking or the fight against illegal networks involved in trafficking in human beings. Lastly, the study will not refer to the measures of prevention and detection which are an integral part of the visa issue process, given that these aspects are dealt with in the EMN study "Visa Policy as a Migration Channel".

The results of this study are aimed at, in particular:

- the political decision-makers, including the Ministers involved and the civil servants (at the Community and national level) involved in drawing up and implementing policies relating to irregular migration;
- national experts, such as university researchers or those belonging to research and think-tank institutions, which could eventually make use of them;
- the players and practitioners of Non-Governmental Organisations (NGO) and their networks;

Before commencing the subject of irregular migration and more particularly the practical measures and mechanisms implemented in order to reduce it, it is important to highlight the direct relationship which exists between the status of irregular migrant and the legislative policies and measures of a given Member State. Actually, it is the legislative framework and its criteria and official definitions which determine the different migratory statuses. That is to say, irregular migration is not a social phenomenon which exists independently of political and legislative realities.

As a result, in Luxembourg, a country signatory to the Schengen Agreements, legislative and statutory conditions as well as specific administrative practices may result in or produce situations of irregularity. Conversely, a political decision may also enable to regularise a person or a category of persons, thus providing pathways out of irregularity.

Several situations of irregularity can be distinguished in Luxembourg:

1. persons who continue to stay in Luxembourg after the expiry of their short-stay visa or, when they do not require a visa, after expiry of the 90-day stay period;
2. persons who change status in transit and who no longer fulfil the conditions for the granting or prolonging of the residence permit issued initially and who have no other residence permit;
3. persons whose authorisation to stay or residence permit have not been renewed;
4. persons working without a valid work permit: a) either in total ‘clandestinity’ that is, without a residence permit, a work permit and without being registered with Social Security, b) or with no residence permit, no work permit, but registered with Social Security, c) or even with a residence permit, with a non-valid work permit, but registered with Social Security;
5. rejected international protection applicants and former recipients of a tolerance status who have neither a residence permit nor any other status and right of stay.

9 ibid.
Any non-Luxembourgish person may find him/herself in a situation of administrative irregularity\textsuperscript{10}, but situations of administrative irregularity predominantly affect third-country nationals (Non-members of the EU and/or not within the European Economic Area) in terms of access to their rights and constitute, by contrast to situations of irregularity of European citizens, a concern in terms of national migratory policy.

1.2. Definitions

Within the context of this study, reference is made to the terms "irregularity" or "irregular" as specified in Resolution 1509 (2006) of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe\textsuperscript{11}. The expressions "person found to be in an irregular situation" or "persons found to be illegally present" is preferred to terms like "illegal migrants" or "clandestine migrants". In the same order of ideas, the study uses the term "irregular migration". These expressions are more neutral and not stigmatizing, as in contrast to the term "illegal"\textsuperscript{12}.

Within a national context, we ‘understand by persons in an irregular administrative situation people who live in Luxembourg who do not or who no longer fulfil, for one reason or another, the legal and administrative conditions of the regulations on the free movement of persons and immigration on the entry, stay or work of foreigners, as they are applied and interpreted\textsuperscript{13}.

In order to promote comparability on an EU level and between the different national reports, references are also made to the EMN glossary which was developed based on the body of EU law, in particular Directive 2009/52/EC\textsuperscript{14}.

\textsuperscript{10} Article 6 of the Modified Law of 29 August 2008 establishes the entry and stay conditions for nationals who are EU foreigners.

\textsuperscript{12} Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1509 (2006), Human Rights of irregular Migrants, 27/06/06.
1.3. Methodology

Each national study analyses the legal and political situation in the respective Member State, complying with the common EMN specifications drawn up in advance. Consequently, a comparative synthesis report is produced by the European Commission which summarizes the principal conclusions of each national report, while highlighting the most important aspects and placing them as far as possible within a European perspective. The different national studies as well as the synthesis report are accessible to the general public.

This study, as with all other EMN studies, will be carried out in each Member State mainly through desk-based research, i.e. based on secondary sources. It collects and analyses data and information already available or published in the Member State or at the international level while putting into perspective with regards to the common specifications.

This study, conducted by the National Contact Point Luxembourg, is based on different sources of information, mentioned and ordered by document type in the bibliography.

In order to determine the national vision, policy and legislation with regard to irregular migration, an in-depth analysis of legal and political documents such as governmental programmes, official speeches, laws, bills and comments on the latter, the views of different socio-political players, and the responses to Parliamentary questions, was conducted. Annual reports by Ministers and administrations concerned with irregular migration and of the Grand Ducal police, and public positions of NGOs as well as publications in the media were considered.

The national policies and practices in place with regard to irregular migration are situated within the framework of the EU policy.

Beyond the analysis of secondary sources, six semi-structured interviews were conducted with:

- The Minister of Labour, Employment and Immigration;
- High-level civil servants from the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Immigration;
- NGO representatives working in the area of (irregular) migration;
- a lawyer practicing in foreign law;
- the Police Airport Control Unit (UCPA) service

The interview partners were chosen according to their expertise with regard to certain aspects relating to irregular migration. All of the interviews were transcribed and analysed systematically.

15 www.emnluxembourg.lu; www.emn.europa.eu
As a preparation to this study, a workshop entitled ‘La politique des visas et la migration irrégulière au Luxembourg’ (Visa policy and irregular migration in Luxembourg) was organised at the University of Luxembourg. This workshop, organised on 7 July 2011, brought together 16 representatives of migrant associations in Luxembourg. Its principal aim was the exchange of ideas and experiences on the aforementioned subject. The conclusions of this workshop were incorporated into this study.

Lastly, although the common specifications set the period of coverage of the study from 2005 to 2010, NCP LU decided to extend the national study until August 2011. This decision can be justified because of major legislative modifications undertaken during the first semester of 2011: the adoption of the law of 1 July 201116 modifying the law on the free movement of persons and immigration, the adoption of the law relating to the right of asylum and to additional forms of protection and transposing directive 2008/115/EC into national law17 (Directive 2008/115/EC of the European Parliament and Council of 16 December 2008 on common standards and procedures in Member States for returning illegally staying third-country nationals), hereinafter called the "returns directive", and the numerous discussions which preceded the opening of the new detention centre for persons having received the order to leave Luxembourgish territory18. Inclusion of these developments was deemed indispensable in order to provide a complete current overview with regard to irregular migration in Luxembourg.

2. POLICY AND LEGAL FRAMEWORK IN RELATION TO IRREGULAR MIGRATION IN LUXEMBOURG

2.1. National policy

The analysis of official documents, published by the government over the last few years, enables us to draw initial conclusions on national policy and the governmental approach (in recent history) to irregular migration in Luxembourg.

2.1.1. The different governmental programmes, the ministerial point of view and the associations

While the governmental programme of 1999-2004 did not explicitly refer to irregular migration/immigration, the programme of 2004-2009\(^\text{19}\) highlighted three points:

- The government is committed to respect the right to international protection, to welcoming "with generosity from a social as well as a legal point of view" persons fleeing a region in conflict or who are persecuted.

- In order to reduce the duration of the procedure of processing applications and to cope with the misuse of the right to international protection, the governmental programme has stipulated amending the law on the asylum procedure, which brought about the law of 5 May 2006 relating to the right of asylum and additional forms of protection\(^\text{20}\). Continuing the same objective, the different administrative departments responsible for processing asylum applications have been reinforced.

- The government has also reiterated its wish to vigorously address irregular immigration and to apply a firm return policy. To achieve these objectives, the government is committed to undertake close cooperation with the countries of origin, to encourage voluntary returns and to build a detention centre. Besides the introduction of mechanisms of positive incentives to returns, sanctions are also stipulated.

In its 2009-2014 governmental programme, the government emphasizes "the importance of the proper functioning of control mechanisms, and the importance of evaluation and sanctions as indispensable tools for the promotion of legal immigration". The close link between the promotion and organisation of regular immigration based on concrete national labour force requirements and the effective combat against irregular immigration and illegal work has been underlined.

Furthermore, the programme confirms that a credible fight against irregular immigration must be based on a consistent return policy of people found to be illegally present. Within this context, the promotion of voluntary returns is presented as a priority in order to preserve the human dignity of the persons concerned. With the objective of developing a common approach for the promotion of voluntary return, the government aims to strengthen cooperation with associations active within the domain of immigration as well as with international organisations specialised in this domain, particularly the UNHCR (the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees) and the IOM (International Organisation for Migration).

At the same time, the government has confirmed its desire to combat illegal work, corollary to the organisation of regular immigration and to rigorously apply the national legislation founded on the European directive on the subject. In particular, the bill transposing the "sanctions" directive should be submitted to the Government Council on 30 September 2011. Luxembourg had already partially anticipated transposition of the same directive in the Law of 29 August 2008 on the free movement of persons and immigration stipulating sanctions relating to irregular migration (Art. 139 to 148).

Ministerial point of view

Questioned on the various aspects of irregular migration, the Minister responsible for immigration emphasized the importance of a holistic approach encompassing the aspects of prevention, control, detention and return policy, but also regularisation. Nevertheless the decision to apply such and such an aspect of the national migration policy seems to depend on the migrants’ countries of origin and the specific requirements. On the other hand, even though he admits its shortcomings in the past, the Minister also insisted on the need for a consistent return policy, which has been reinforced in 2011 with the opening of the new detention centre\textsuperscript{26}.

The government’s wish to develop a national policy that is falling squarely within the European context was also mentioned during the interview. The Ministers notably insisted on the fact that it is necessary for national policy to reflect legislative developments on the European level, based on a spirit of cooperation and solidarity between Member States\textsuperscript{27}.

From the Ministerial point of view, the modification of the law of the free movement of persons and immigration, transposing the "returns directive", presents a clear framework for dealing with situations of irregularity and return, while the Minister acknowledges the complexity of certain individual situations\textsuperscript{28}.

Associations

On the other hand, during the interviews, the NGOs expressed generalised criticism relating to various national procedures. The need to have a comprehensible ‘straight line’ policy regulating the procedures of asylum, return or regularisation, was highlighted on several occasions. Specific administrative practices, or "case-by-case" policy, were mentioned as subjects of concern.\textsuperscript{29}

For a more advanced analysis, it goes without saying that the general political framework regarding irregular immigration must be put into relation to the legislative framework. As already mentioned above, the latter has undergone major modifications throughout the last few years.

\textsuperscript{29} Point of view of NGOs, 11/07/2011, lines 603-607: "I have the impression that Luxembourg prefers to have more latitude, more freedom of possible action and like that, it can do so on a case-by-case basis, the great difficulty in all that, is that there are no straight lines".

Point of view of NGOs, 22/06/2011, lines 510-519 and 529-530:

"At present we have a policy which stipulates a procedure, an asylum or other procedure, and if a person is in an irregular situation, the consequence is that they are returned to their country. With the present laws, it’s a logical consequence… If the law stipulates the return, it is still better to do so as rapidly as possible to undertake the procedures rapidly and to send them back rapidly. This is what we observe often, that people still have hope and try to do everything to stay. It’s this incomprehension of the system; it’s very serious for other people".

2.2. The legislative framework

The legislative framework with regard to irregular migration is made up in particular by the modified law of 29 August 2008 on the free movement of persons and immigration and the modified law of 5 May 2006 relating to the right of asylum and additional forms of protection which were recently modified by the law of 1 July 2011.

The law of 1 July 2011 transposed into national law directive 2008/115/EC entitled "returns directive". Moreover, the Law of 29 August 2008 on the free movement of persons and immigration had already transposed six European directives into national law: the family reunification directive, the directive on the status of third-country nationals long-term residents, the directive on the right of citizens of the Union and their family members to move and reside freely, the directive on the residence permit issued for victims of trafficking in human beings, the directive on the entry and residence conditions for students and the directive relating to admission and residence of researchers.

National legislation on immigration, adopted in 2008\textsuperscript{39}, the law establishing the Detention Centre\textsuperscript{40}, already comprised a large part of the provisions complying with the "returns directive", particularly in relation to detention, procedural guarantees during removal, suspension of removal in case of illness and the rules of good conduct to be applied by the officials responsible for execution of a removal order.

However, integral transposition of the aforementioned directive was only achieved by the Law of 1 July 2011 modifying the modified law of 29 August 2008 and the Modified law of 5 May 2006.

The major modifications concern:

a) the promotion of voluntary return: the person who is the subject of a return decision has a period of 30 days to voluntarily satisfy the obligation to leave the territory. This time-limit may if necessary be extended and the person concerned can request voluntary return assistance\textsuperscript{41};

b) the introduction, besides administrative detention in a closed detention centre of a less coercive alternative measure, namely a compulsory residence order\textsuperscript{42};

c) the strictly equal treatment of persons subject to the obligation of return, whether they are residing without authorisation because they entered the national territory irregularly or whether they are residing without authorisation because they are rejected applicants for international protection. They may all, in certain circumstances and after verification undertaken on a case-by-case basis, be granted a deferral of removal for a fixed duration\textsuperscript{43};

d) a relaxation of the conditions for granting a residence permit for humanitarian reasons of exceptional gravity\textsuperscript{44}.

The Grand Ducal regulation of 17 August 2011\textsuperscript{45} sets the general terms and conditions of the detention regime in the new Detention centre, in particular the rights and duties of the persons placed in administrative detention. It repeals at the same time the Grand Ducal regulation of 20 September 2002, creating a temporary centre of residence for foreigners in an irregular situation.

The legitimacy and holding conditions of third-country nationals in a situation or irregular stay in Luxembourg have been raised several times over the last few years and have been the subject to a number of debates within civil society, culminating in a press release from the Lëtzebuerger Flüchtlingsrot – Luxembourger Refugees Collective (LFR) in 2010\textsuperscript{46}. More particularly, before the opening of the new Detention centre, persons found to be in an irregular situation were detained at the Luxembourg Penitentiary Centre (CPL) in Schrassig, which was the subject of strong criticism.
A decision of the administrative court\textsuperscript{47} furthermore ordered the immediate release of a person held in the Penitentiary Centre referring to a decree of the administrative court (decree 25.5559 C)\textsuperscript{48} which had deemed the Detention Centre as not compliant with article 120 (1) of the Law of 29 August 2008. The Court followed up its decision by imposing a period of 2 years for the construction of a new detention centre outside the CPL. As on 1 October 2010 the new detention centre had not yet been completed, the court ordered the release of the person.
The government, claiming that the placement of a person within the Penitentiary Centre in a unit separate from that of other detainees, responded to the clauses of article 120 (1) of the law of 29
August 2008, appealed against the court’s decision\textsuperscript{49}.
The Administrative Court, in an extraordinary public hearing on 15 October 2010\textsuperscript{50}, reformed the decision initially pronounced by declaring that the detention of persons in an irregular situation in the Luxembourg Penitentiary Centre in Schrassig, responded in principle to the requirements of the law of 29 August 2008 complying with the entry and stay of foreigners\textsuperscript{51}. Nonetheless, these the prison for foreigners in an irregular situation will no longer be used for the detention of foreigners from 1 October 2010. The Court stated: "Considering that the Court estimates that the present temporary situation of the residential centre functioning within the penitentiary centre enclosure will not in the long term comply with the notion of a closed structure as stipulated by the legislator by way of Article 120 (1) of the Law of 29 August 2008 and should be absorbed by effective implementation of a closed structure outside of the penitentiary centre enclosure within a reasonable time period of two years from coming into force, on 1 October 2008, of the aforementioned Law of 29 August 2008, which is in concrete terms up until 1 October 2010." See \url{http://www.ja.etat.lu/25559c.doc}

\textsuperscript{51} This confirmation was based more on a pleading error by the recurring party than on a genuine analysis of the situation. On this point the Court says: "Insofar as where the defendant has essentially only criticized the position of principle that the Retention Centre cannot be, for this specific case, within the enclosure of a penitentiary centre but it does not moreover criticize the concrete detention terms put forward by the State, the Court is led, by reformation of the decision taken, to hold that at the present time, even beyond 1 October 2010, the temporary residential centre is to be described as a closed structure responding in principle to the requirements of Article 120 (1) of the Law of 29 August 2008\textsuperscript{8}".
Discussions have emphasized the importance of the establishment of a new independent Detention Centre outside of the Penitentiary Centre, which finally opened on 21 August 2011\textsuperscript{52}.

Regarding the legislative and statutory mechanism, it is still necessary to mention the new Grand Ducal regulation of 17 August 2011\textsuperscript{53} establishing the rules of good conduct to be applied by the officials responsible for execution of the removal order, complying with article 124 (4) of the modified law of 29 August 2008.

Over and above the law on immigration, the following laws are to be taken into consideration, even if the latter do not contain a direct reference to irregular migration:

i) the law of 18 December 2009 organising social assistance\textsuperscript{54} and

ii) the law of 6 February 2009 relating to compulsory school attendance\textsuperscript{55}.

These two laws are analysed in more detail under section 2.1.4.

The Labour Code\textsuperscript{56} takes into account the fight against illegal work. The Labour Code provisions relating in particular to the secondment of workers within the framework of a transnational service provision\textsuperscript{57}, to the illegal availability of labour\textsuperscript{58} and the prohibition on clandestine work\textsuperscript{59} are particularly important to underline.

2.2.1. Sanctions stipulated in the national legislation as regards irregular migration

Articles 139 to 148 of the modified Law of 29 August 2008 on the free movement of persons and immigration establish sanctions relating to irregular migration\textsuperscript{60}. The law stipulates sanctions for individuals, linked to the entry, irregular stay and to the lack of awareness of decisions of removal, illegal work and employment, but also for people and transport companies which support, directly or indirectly, the irregular entry and stay of other people. In this way the law stipulates fines for transport companies which breach their obligation to inform the police of the identity of the passengers they transport to Luxembourg and which transport third-country nationals without travel documents and required visas.

The modified Law of 29 August 2008 on immigration also equips the government with instruments related to the fight against illegal work, by strengthening the sanctions against employers who employ foreigners without residence permits for salaried workers; prison sentences were increased.

Furthermore, additional sentences may be pronounced as a temporary prohibition to exercise a professional activity (maximum of three years) or temporary closure of the business (a sentence which may be five years or be definitive).

Luxembourg has partially anticipated transposition of the directive stipulating sanctions against employers of third-country nationals staying irregularly, by obliging the employer to pay arrears (salaries, social security contributions, taxes).

The law also stipulates custodial sentences and/or fines for any foreigner who, removed or deported, has entered the country despite a ban on entry to the territory.

2.2.2. Recent legislative and political adaptations as regards irregular migration

To cope with the increased number of applicants for international protection of Serbian origin known since the end of 2010, Luxembourg entered into a cooperation agreement with Belgrade on 5 May 2011. The increase in the number of applicants for international protection (mostly Roma) was presented as a direct consequence of the liberalisation of the visa regime within the Schengen Area for Serbian and Macedonian nationals. National authorities have a tendency to consider these migrants as "economic refugees", an expression which departs from the "typical" framework of regulations defining international protection. If it is true that international protection seekers coming from the Republic of Serbia cannot be considered irregular migrants as such, the fact that migrants considered "economic migrants" have few options to settle in the Grand Duchy, leaves us to assume that many decide to use the international protection application procedure as a "migratory strategy". However, as Serbia is on the list of ‘safe countries of origins’, the chance that an application for international protection will be accepted is practically nil as the figures on the decisions regarding international protection illustrate. As a consequence, this situation risks creating tomorrow’s irregular migrants. If their applications for international protection are systematically refused and the persons have only little possibility of obtaining a residence permit, these migrants may turn towards the informal economy, particularly as regards the labour market, as a last resort for their "migratory strategy", unless they decide on a voluntary return to their country of origin.

As a direct response to the growing number of applications for international protection, notably form Serbia, and in order to contain the migratory flow the government has concluded a cooperation agreement with the Serbian authorities and has reintroduced the option of processing international protection applications (of Serbian nationals) via an accelerated procedure. The national authorities no longer used this accelerated procedure following the preliminary question posed by the Administrative Court relating to the lack of an option of making recourse against the administrative decision to process an application via an accelerated procedure. The option of recourse was finally introduced by a legislative modification.

In concrete terms, the government has taken two initiatives to respond: on one hand, the Council of Government has added Serbia to the list of safe countries of origin – which enables to resort to the

71 The accelerated procedure is stipulated by Article 20 of the Modified law of 5 May 2006 relating to the right of asylum and additional forms of protection for any application concerning in particular applicants originating from safe countries as defined by Article 21 of the aforementioned law, http://www.legilux.public.lu/leg/a/archives/2006/0078/a078.pdf
72 It was suspended by a preliminary question made by the Administrative Court, hearing of 3 February 2010, no. 26396 of the roll, before the European Court of Justice. The decision of the European Court of Justice occurred on 28 July 2011 (Order of 28 July 2011, Brahim Samba Diouf v. Ministre du Travail, de l’Emploi et de l’Immigration, Case C-69/10) and showed that administrative action was not necessary.
accelerated procedure; on the other, the government registered the bill creating an appeal against the ministerial decision to process an application for international protection within the accelerated procedure framework.

The addition of Serbia to the list of safe countries of origin\textsuperscript{74} was perceived by NGOs as an example where the government has not delayed in dealing with a specific situation «according to the contingent of applicants for international protection» known in Luxembourg\textsuperscript{75}. Already beforehand, with the formal acknowledgement of Kosovo, on 21 February 2008\textsuperscript{76}, a change as regards the return policy for nationals of Kosovo (rejected international protection seekers) could be observed. In 2008, the Luxembourgish authorities considered that the circumstances which had rendered the return of refused applicants for international protection from Kosovo impossible, no longer existed. The national authorities actually considered that the personal safety of rejected applicants was no longer threatened and their basic rights would be guaranteed by the Kosovar authorities\textsuperscript{77}.

In order to facilitate voluntary returns, the Ministry signed a cooperation project relating to assistance with voluntary return for third-country nationals and with their reintegration into their country of origin with the IOM. The first programme which covered the period from 1 August 2008 to 15 March 2009 was limited to rejected applicants from Kosovo who no longer benefited from measures of tolerance. Sixteen people from Kosovo were concerned at the time.\textsuperscript{78}

With the same objective (to reduce irregular migration), the programme «Migrate with open eyes» (MYO) was initiated in Cape Verde. The latter was moreover extended from 2009-2010 and focused mainly on «the familiarisation of future Cape Verdean migrants (family reunification) with the social, linguistic and other realities of life in Luxembourg»\textsuperscript{79}. Likewise, the Partnership for mobility signed on 5 June 2008 between Luxembourg, the European Union and Cape Verde, aims to facilitate legal migration and to prevent irregular immigration\textsuperscript{80}.

From 2008-2010, the number of people who took part in information and awareness-raising activities is estimated at 2,200. Between December 2008 and October 2010, 216 people presented an application to obtain an authorisation to stay with a view to family reunification via the Luxembourg Bureau of Cooperation in Praia. 156 of these applications were approved.

It is within this same context that the CAMPO project was initiated in 2009 (and which will end in December 2011). The principal objective of this project is to promote legal mobility between Cape Verde and the EU by providing information on the legal migration channels. The project also aims to facilitate reintegration into the Cape Verdean labour market of emigrants who return to the country and to better capitalise on the abilities and resources they acquired during their stay abroad.

2.2.3. Regularisation programme

In May 2001, the Government undertook a "large scale" regularisation of migrants in an irregular situation in Luxembourg. This administrative regularisation, presented as a single measure (a ‘one shot’ action) aimed to regularise the situation of certain categories of third-country nationals residing without authorisation to stay for a certain amount of time on Luxembourg territory, and rejected international protection seekers. This regularisation was predominantly based on labour market integration of the concerned persons, but it also focused on certain categories of people being regularised for humanitarian reasons. Applicants had to prove that they had been in the country since 1 July 1998 at least; had resided and worked there since 1 January 2000 or, in the case of Kosovo refugees that they had arrived before the 1st of January 2000.

The political decision to undertake this regularisation was also the result of pressure exerted by several main associations and principal unions after a time (at the end of the 1990s) where Luxembourg faced a rise in the number of accepted refugees, particularly from the countries of the former Yugoslavia. Consequently, 75% of the individuals regularised were nationals of countries of Cape Verde.

See reference 76.

CAMPO : for greater mobility of skills between Cape Verde and the EU, http://www.africa-eu-partnership.org/fr/node/1846

Applications for regularisations were presented between 15 May and 13 July 2001.

Individuals were nevertheless excluded who, by their behaviour, posed a threat to public order or who presented false papers. News Articles, ‘Marie-Josée Jacobs, Francois Biltgen and Luc Frieden provide information on the regularisation of undocumented persons, 09/05/2001, http://www.gouvernement.lu/salle_presse/actualite/2001/05/09_biltgen/index.html

the former Yugoslavia. And the majority of people regularised were international protection applicants who arrived before 1st of July 1998, a category of people registered and known by the authorities. As this regularisation was done in consultation with the sectors of the countries that were most affected by labour shortages, the programme initially had a positive echo and was hailed as innovative. However, considering the low number of applicants and the reluctance of some employers to hire immigrants, especially due to certain administrative requirements (like the obligation for the candidate to be in possession of a valid passport which was not always easy for nationals of countries of the former Yugoslavia under administration of the international community), the regularisation programme had difficulty achieving its objectives. Moreover, the fear of some employees in an irregular situation of losing their job by introducing a regularisation application (due to, if necessary, pressure exerted by their employers) constituted a genuine obstacle to regularisation.

2.2.4. Other policies indirectly linked to irregular migration: access to social rights

The right to education based on compulsory schooling, two aspects stipulated by the national legislation, requiring that any child residing in Luxembourg and aged over four years (over four before 1 September of the school year), receives an education and this independently of his/her legal status or that of his/her parents. Therefore, children of an age to attend school must be enrolled in the municipality of their place of residence, which does not go without posing several practical problems for people in an irregular situation especially if the municipalities refuse to enrol the children.

As regards the right to access social assistance and housing in Luxembourg, the administrative distinction between applicants for international protection who have been rejected, and people in an irregular situation is set. The latter have no right to accommodation or to other types of social assistance, with the exception of access to emergency medical care. However, during the months of “Winter action” (December-March), a national association takes care of people in an irregular situation providing emergency accommodation in one of its shelters\textsuperscript{89}. For rejected international protection seekers, social assistance ceases in principle after the final negative decision relating to their application. In practice, people "rejected" continue to receive accommodation and food for a certain amount of time (possibly up until their effective return) but no longer have the right to financial assistance and to granting of a transport permit.\textsuperscript{90}

\textit{Access to health insurance}

Rejected international protection seekers may continue to receive Social Security benefits as long as they remain in contact with the Luxembourg Reception and Integration Agency (OLAI) which is responsible for the payment of Social Security contributions. They may therefore receive medical care until they leave the country. Moreover, within the domain of access to medical care for international protection seekers, a practical information guide on access to medical care\textsuperscript{91} was launched in 2008 by a body of associations.

People deprived of the residence permit remain, in principle, excluded from health insurance benefits. They may, however, have access to optional voluntary insurance as long as they provide proof of residence (proof of rent or accommodation certificate). They must as a final step present a residence certificate of the municipality. People residing without an authorisation may enrol and be insured voluntarily with the Social Security Centre (Centre commun de la sécurité sociale - CCSS). The CCSS does not undertake a check to verify if the conditions for stay or residence of a foreigner on Luxembourg territory are fulfilled\textsuperscript{92}. It is equally possible for a boss to enrol his/her employees in an irregular situation with social security, given that the Labour and Employment Ministry does not have the right to conduct verifications at the level of Social Security files. The centre accepts affiliation if there is a hierarchical relationship in accomplishment of the work. As soon as social security contributions have been paid, rights to health care services are open.

Even in the absence of voluntary affiliation to Social Security, any person has the right to be cared for in Luxembourg, however at his/her own expense, since a person who is not affiliated may not claim reimbursement of health care costs from health insurance. Financial payment (up to 80% of the costs) may be granted by the "Commission des Subsides Sociaux pour Particuliers" (Commission of Social Subsidies for Individuals) after consultation with the attending doctor or the social service of the clinic in question.

2.3. The institutional framework

In accordance with the legislation, the Minister who is in charge of immigration as part of his/her duties may conduct controls or have controls carried out to verify if the conditions set for entry and stay of foreigners are fulfilled. In practice, several government actors and institutions are responsible for the implementation and/or application of the mechanisms and practical measures aiming to fight irregular migration.

2.3.1. Pre-entry and stay

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MAE) is responsible for issuing visas at the level of its consular network and for implementation of computer tools linked to visa issuing (VIS) in association with the Centre informatique de l’Etat (Government Computer Centre - administration coordinating computer activities for the entire Luxembourg State). Regarding the latter aspect, an inter-ministerial working party, bringing together the MAE, the Ministry of Justice, the Grand Ducal Police, the Government Computer Centre and Information Service, was responsible for piloting the implementation of the VIS and the SIS and of the common visa policy.

The Passport Office is responsible for issuing short-term visas (visa C). As Luxembourg has relatively few direct representations abroad, the Grand Duchy resorts to the diplomatic missions of other European Union Member States (Germany, Belgium, Spain, France, Hungary, Netherlands, Portugal, Slovakia) as regards applications and processing of visas sent directly to it. The Directorate of Immigration of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is responsible for processing long-term visa applications (visa D). The Minister of Immigration grants residence permits and issues residence permits exclusively. The Directorate of Immigration also processes applications for international protection registered in Luxembourg and the Minister of Immigration grants or refuses the status of refugee and the status of subsidiary protection⁹⁸.

2.3.2. Border controls

Numerous players possess competences for border control at the sole external border of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, namely the International Airport of Luxembourg. The Grand Ducal Police and in particular the Police Airport Control Unit (Unité Centrale de la Police à l'aéroport - UCPA) is responsible for surveillance and control at the airport border, issuing emergency visas as well as the implementation of the information system (SIS). The Airport Control Department (SCA), hierarchically dependent on the UCPA, is comprised of two departments, the SCF (Border Control Department) and the SDV (Travel Documents Department). The SCF constitutes the first line of control. It is responsible for checking any person who enters or leaves the Schengen Area as well as control at the General Aviation Terminal (GAT) counter. In summary, the SCF is responsible for surveillance and control of the sole external border in Luxembourg. The department’s duties include the fight against irregular immigration, the fight against trafficking in human beings and the prevention of any threat concerning domestic security and public order⁹⁹.

2.3.3. Controls on the territory

Foreigners must be in a position to show documents proclaiming their right of entry and stay on the territory on demand of the Grand Ducal Police. Officials may nevertheless retain the travel documents of people in an irregular situation on production of a receipt acting as a justification of their identity\textsuperscript{100}.

According to the clauses of the Labour Code, the Labour Inspectorate (ITM) is the competent national authority regarding the application of clauses concerning secondment of workers. The ITM must ensure that the standards relating to clandestine or illegal work are respected and applied including the stipulations regarding work permits for third-country nationals from a Member State who are not nationals of a Member State of the European Economic Area\textsuperscript{101}. Within this framework, the ITM works in close collaboration with the Directorate of Immigration, the Grand Ducal Police and the Customs and Excise Administration.

2.3.4. Detention

Until the opening of the new Detention Centre on 21 August 2011, people found to be in an irregular situation were detained in a separate section of Luxembourg’s Penitentiary Centre in Schrassig. This former ‘centre’ operated under the responsibility of the Ministry of Justice, while the population detained there was under the supervision of the Directorate of Immigration of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs\textsuperscript{102}.

2.3.5. Return

The removal of persons refused the right to international protection and persons found to be irregular present is incumbent upon the Directorate of Immigration. On the other hand, the Grand Ducal Police which arrests and escorts the people is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of the Interior and the Greater Region.

With due regard to ensuring the rules of good conduct during a removal order\textsuperscript{103}, the Minister Delegate for Foreign Affairs signed a framework agreement on 5 February 2009 with the Red Cross conferring on the latter a mission of observer stipulated by Article 6 of the Grand Ducal regulation of 26 September 2008\textsuperscript{104}. This agreement stipulates that the Red Cross is informed at least 72 hours in advance before the removal of a person. The Red Cross may moreover support the persons concerned by a removal order in preparations before their departure. During boarding and throughout the trip, a Red Cross representative accompanies the persons removed, offers them moral support and protects them against any use of brutal immobilisation techniques. However, the report written by the Red Cross following each removal remains confidential. The removal itself is undertaken by Grand Ducal Police officers.

\textbf{2.3.6. Other players working in the domain of irregular migration and their roles regarding the elaboration and implementation of policies}

The LFR (Lëtzebuerger Flüchtlingsrot/Luxembourger Refugees Collective) is a collective of autonomous associations, comprised of member associations, each of which retains its autonomy, mode of operation and specific approach.

The core of the Collective’s work consists of protecting the rights of persons who seek refuge in Luxembourg, in agreement with the international and European standards and the Luxembourgish legislation. When persons are rejected international protection and risk return, the LFR also intervenes\textsuperscript{105}. Other players who regularly intervene on the matter are the Consultative Commission of Human Rights which presented a very detailed opinion in April 2003\textsuperscript{106} on the removal of persons in an irregular situation, and ASTI, CLAE, Caritas and CEFIS (formerly known as Inter-Community Sesopi-Centre)\textsuperscript{107}. The last 4 associations joined forces with the unions OGB-L and LCGB, to lobby in favour of the regularisation of irregular persons. During implementation of the regularisation, the platform was represented by a member with observer status within the support committee, comprised of representatives from the 3 Ministries concerned (Family, Justice and Labour)\textsuperscript{108}.

The LFR also follows evolution of international and European legislative instruments, their transposition into national law and their implementation. This informal platform also carries out the objective of awareness raising on international protection among the public\textsuperscript{109}. In order to do so, the Refugee Collective writes and publishes opinions on bills, policy statements and evaluation reports. Any policy statement or public action requires the unanimous approval of the members of the Collective. If unanimity is not achieved, the policy statement may still be made public but only on behalf of the signatory associations and not on behalf of the LFR.

Other players question legislative initiatives of political decision-makers with regard to migration and the right to international protection. This is particularly the case with the "Migration and Integration Platform"\textsuperscript{110} which regularly submits opinions on bills. Any association or NGO may moreover contribute to the political debate by way of official opinions and policy statements.

3. PRACTICAL MEASURES IMPLEMENTED FOR REDUCING IRREGULAR MIGRATION

3.1. Pre-Entry: practical measures undertaken to address irregular migration before the migrant arrives in the host (Member) State.

With regards to the prevention of irregular migration, it must first of all be noted that preventive measures implemented in Luxembourg are considered as limited as they exceed the country’s own resources. In addition, Luxembourg does not have external borders with the exception of the international airport, and has no diplomatic presence in the majority of third countries. Hence the importance for Luxembourg of a common European policy and cooperation (controls at external borders, exchange of information) in this matter was highlighted by the Minister himself. This concern goes hand-in-hand with a commitment and the involvement of Luxembourg in accordance with its available resources in common actions and operations (for example involvement in FRONTEX operations).

3.1.1. Information programmes

At the preventive level, a number of initiatives existed or still exist; more particularly the project "Migrate with open eyes (MYO)" and the mobility partnership between the EU and Cape Verde. The project "MYO" put in place in 2006 in Cape Verde with Luxembourgish cooperation and extended from 2009 to 2010 enabled persons who envisage immigrating to Luxembourg for family reunification to obtain information about the opportunities and constraints of immigration, to familiarise themselves with the country’s social and cultural realities, or even to obtain information about options to return to Cap Verde.

Likewise, the Partnership for mobility between the European Union (between Luxembourg, Spain, Portugal and France) and Cape Verde signed on 5 June 2008 aims to facilitate legal migration on one hand and to fight irregular immigration on the other. Based on reciprocity, this partnership objective is to facilitate the legal migration of certain categories of people between Cape Verde and the signatory European countries by being based on a dialogue focusing on short-stay visa issues. At the same time the partnership has an additional objective, to prevent and fight trafficking of migrants and trafficking in human beings.

Lastly, a cooperation agreement was entered into force on 5 May 2011 between Luxembourg and Serbia to cope with an inflow of DPIs of Serbian origin, observed from the end of 2010. As a matter of fact, persons of Serbian origin are not in an irregular situation to start with because they no longer are required to have a visa to re-enter the Schengen territory. Once they submit their application for international protection, they have a right of stay during examination of their application. Only after rejection of their application can the persons become ‘irregular’.

The cooperation agreement signed between Luxembourg and the Republic of Serbia aims to put into place information on the right to freedom of movement of Serbian nationals. National and Serbian authorities consider that information campaigns can prevent situations of irregularity, even more since the majority of international protection applications from Serbian (and Macedonian) nationals are rejected.

Apart from governmental initiatives, several ad-hoc initiatives were taken by national associations. The internet portal ‘http://www.bienvenue.lu/’ put online by ASTI and co-financed by the Luxembourg Reception and Integration Agency (OLAI) and the European Integration Fund, brings together essential information on entry to and stay in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, thus facilitating access to information for third-country nationals who wish to settle in Luxembourg. The information can be downloaded in several languages and is accessible from any computer connected to the internet.

Another information project was put in place by the association "Amitié Luxembourg-Montenegro" (Friendship Luxembourg-Montenegro) with the support of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The modified law of 29 August 2008 on the free movement of persons and immigration has been translated into Serbo-Croatian. The objective was to inform nationals of Montenegro of the terms and conditions of entry to and stay in Luxembourg. This initiative follows the more general observation of a lack of information or incorrect information on the rights and constraints of the free movement of third-country nationals in Luxembourg available in the country of origin.\textsuperscript{121}

Generally, associations welcome this type of information and awareness-raising initiative. The option to set up an information office in the country of origin, where candidates for migration would be obliged to pass by, was mentioned during an interview that we conducted.\textsuperscript{122}

The modified law of 29 August 2008 presents the conditions of entry to and stay on the territory of Luxembourg.\textsuperscript{123} It is necessary to mention right away that the law establishes the distinction between different types of entry and stay authorisations depending on the duration (more or less than three months)\textsuperscript{124} and the purpose of the stay (in particular family visit, studies, paid or independent work etc.)\textsuperscript{125} A distinction is also made between the third-country national short-term and long-term resident.\textsuperscript{126}

For stays of less than three months, the third-country national must fulfil the conditions stipulated by article 34, particularly having a valid passport, not being the subject of a ban on entry to the territory or not being considered as constituting a threat to public order.\textsuperscript{127} The person must make a declaration of arrival to the municipal administration of the place where s/he intends to stay within three working days from his/her entry to the territory. A detainee status serves as a declaration in all cases where the third-country national is staying in the country for touristic reasons.\textsuperscript{128}

For stays longer than 3 months, the third-country national must fulfil the conditions stipulated in Article 34, i.e., they must have a temporary residence permit for a paid or independent worker, a highly qualified worker, an athlete, a student, a trainee or volunteer, researcher, family member or even for reasons of a private nature in particular humanitarian reasons\textsuperscript{129}. In these cases, the application for obtaining an authorization to stay must be presented by the third-country national before his/her entry to the territory, under penalty of inadmissibility\textsuperscript{130}. Moreover, the third-country national in possession of his/her authorization to stay must make a declaration of arrival in the municipality within three working days of his/her entry to the territory\textsuperscript{131}. Before the expiry of a period of three months, the third-country national must request the issue of a residence permit by presenting a medical certificate\textsuperscript{132} and sufficient proof of accommodation.

The limitations to entry and stay are for their part established in section 5 of chapter 3 of the modified law of 29 August 2008\textsuperscript{133}. More precisely, Article 100 defines the conditions according to which a person is considered staying irregularly. The law considers the third-country national residing without an authorisation to stay if s/he does not fulfil or no longer fulfils the conditions of entry to and stay in the territory as stipulated by the law\textsuperscript{134}. To verify if the entry and stay conditions of foreigners are fulfilled, the Minister can at any time conduct specific controls or have them carried out when presumptions of fraud exist or if marriage, partnership or adoption has been entered into for the sole purpose of entry and stay on the territory\textsuperscript{135}. In particular, the "Airport Control Department (SCA)" of the Grand Ducal Police is responsible for checking people at the airport\textsuperscript{136} and "the Labour Inspectorate (ITM)" for monitoring observation of the clauses regarding residence permits with a view to a paid activity\textsuperscript{137}. The Minister may even access, via a direct computer system, processing of data of a personal nature\textsuperscript{138}.

Lastly, the law again stipulates sanctions for irregular entry and stay. Any third-country national who does not respect or who no longer respects the conditions established by the law on entry to the territory\textsuperscript{139} or who has knowingly made false declarations or produced falsified documents to enter the territory is likely to be punished by a prison sentence\textsuperscript{140}. Help with irregular entry and stay is also punished with fines and imprisonment\textsuperscript{141}.

In order to prevent refusal of entry to the territory, airlines are obliged to send the Grand Ducal Police information relating to passengers they are going to transport. The company which disembarks a passenger onto national territory who does not respect the entry conditions, is obliged to escort or have escorted the person in their country of origin and is punished with a fine if necessary.

3.1.3. Prohibition of entry to the territory

The law of 29 August 2008 stipulated prohibition of entry to the territory against any person in an irregular situation who was the subject of a removal decision. This situation was however modified with the adoption of the Law of 1 July 2011 modifying the law of 29 August 2008. As a matter of fact, Article 96(3) of the modified law of 29 August 2008 stipulates that the removal decision cannot be coupled with prohibition of entry to the territory in the following cases: if the person had not respected the obligation to return within the stipulated period or if s/he represents a danger to public order, public safety or national security. In these cases, prohibition on entry to the territory can be declared for 5-year duration, either simultaneously to the return decision, or by a subsequent separate decision. The introduction of this subsequent decision aroused discussion prior to adoption of the law, in particularly by the LFR and the CCDH. Criticisms generally focused on the problems linked to the rights of defence of the person concerned by prohibition of entry on the territory, particularly on the concrete impossibility of contesting a decision of prohibition of entry made subsequently to removal from the territory and on the problems linked to the international protection seeker’s right. Legal practitioners also expressed their concerns regarding 146 This five-year period may be exceeded if "the foreigner constitutes a serious threat to public order, public safety or national security" (Article112(1)). The law stipulates a prison sentence of six months to three years and a fine between 251 and 3000 euros for any person expelled or removed who returns to Luxembourg despite a prohibition of entry to the territory (Article 142).

147 The persons involved may submit an application, well-founded, for lifting the entry prohibition only after a period of at least three years (Article 112 (1)).
148 Article 112 of the Law of 29 August 2008 stipulated that "prohibition of entry to the territory of a maximum duration of five years may be declared simultaneously by the Minister for reasons of public order, public safety or public health".
149 "It is stipulated in the new Article 112 (1) of the law on immigration of 2008 (1st Article (16°) of the Bill) that decisions on return may be combined with prohibition of entry to the territory with a maximum duration of five years declared either simultaneously to the decision of return, or by a subsequent separate decision. Beside the consideration holding that neither the present wording nor the Directive stipulated the possibility for the Minister to decide on a prohibition of entry to the territory by a decision separated from the return decision, respectively to the decision declaring illegal stay by a third-country national, the LFR estimates contrary to the interest of the latter to not be immediately set regarding any prohibition of entry to the territory, respectively of having to wait for a subsequent the registrations of prohibitions of entry with the SIS, the use of alerts referring to Article 96 of the Schengen Agreement\textsuperscript{150} and their direct implications for the persons concerned. More specifically, the concerns focused on the danger of existence of a type of administrative practice of ‘almost automatic’ renewal of the prohibition of entry\textsuperscript{151}.

3.1.4. "Insecurity" of residence permits decision being made without any period stipulated within which the latter should intervene. It would be more compliant with the Directive than any prohibition of entry to the territory either decided on simultaneously to the return decision, without any other possibility to notify of it subsequently. The LFR therefore requests the legislator to stipulate that any prohibition of entry to the territory is decided on simultaneously to the return decision, without any other possibility to notify of it subsequently. Moreover, the LFR is concerned that the legislature had omitted to transpose Article 11, paragraph 5, of the return directive which reiterates the basic right to international protection and points out that prohibition of entry must be applied without prejudice of this right. By transposing this paragraph into the law, the legislature will ensure that a prohibition of entry to the territory will not give rise to a violation of Article 14 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: "Faced with persecution, any person has the right to seek asylum and to receive asylum in other countries", and Article 18 of the European Charter of Fundamental Rights which guarantees the right to seek asylum in the European Union. In the absence of transposition of this paragraph of the directive, the three-month period necessary according to the present legislation before being able to present an application for lifting of a prohibition of entry, and the six-month period for obtaining a response to this application, could constitute obstacles to the basic right of persons to seek asylum in case of persecution”.

So the Council of State made a declaration against this clause by saying: « It results however implicitly from the wording of Article 11, 1st paragraph b) insofar as where non-respect of the obligation of return may obviously only be observed at the end of the period initially granted, and not at the time of the decision of removal itself. It is still the case that a decision of prohibition of entry declared after execution of the removal renders any possibility of appeal hypothetical. ”

1. The data relating to foreigners who are alerted for purposes of non-admission are integrated into a database of national alerts resulting from decisions made, respecting the rules of procedure stipulated by the national legislation, by the administrative authorities or the competent jurisdictions.
2. The decisions may be based on the threat to public order or to national security which the presence of a foreigner on national territory may constitute.
3. The decisions may be founded on the fact that the foreigner has been the subject of a removal, return or expulsion order not deferred or suspended comprising or coupled with prohibition of entry, or, if need by, of stay, founded on non-respect of the national regulations relating to the entry or stay of foreigners.

\textsuperscript{150} Article 96:

The decisions may be founded on the fact that the foreigner has been the subject of a removal, return or expulsion order not deferred or suspended comprising or coupled with prohibition of entry, or, if need by, of stay, founded on non-respect of the national regulations relating to the entry or stay of foreigners.

And systematically he checks the extension box. And so the police officer goes into the system and extends it for three more years. There is no individual examination, no notification, although, a notification because you try..."
According to various NGO representatives in Luxembourg, the subject of issuing, and renewing of residence permits, and more specifically what they describe as the increasing "insecurity"\(^\text{152}\) of residence permits, particularly in other Member States, was raised on several occasions as a potential source of irregular migration. On several occasions, persons having (had) a residence permit in another Member State found themselves in an irregular in Luxembourg. NGOs mentioned in this respect the political emphasis on reinforcing the temporary nature of residence permits, leading to long delays when renewing permits\(^\text{153}\).

3.2. Entry: practical measures undertaken to identify and detect irregular migrants at borders

3.2.1. External border controls

Border controls undertaken at the Luxembourg Airport are done with the particular aim of contributing to fight irregular immigration and trafficking in human beings. Complying with the Schengen Borders Code, controls are conducted at border crossing points by members of the Police Airport Control Unit (UCPA) to ensure that travellers are authorised to enter or leave the territory of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg.

This unit, comprised of the Airport Control Department\(^\text{154}\) (SCA), the Border Control Department (SCF) and the Detention Control Department at the airport (SGA), counts 60 people (police officers...}

\(^{152}\) The association representative interviewed referred to the temporary nature of and the administrative practice of renewal of residence permits.

\(^{153}\) Point of view of NGOs, 22/06/2011, lines 101-104: It happens. The majority of people whom we encounter in our work, it’s perhaps also people who have a residence permit in another European country, with that they travel for the first three months and do not stay for more than three months in Luxembourg. So we see this more often”.

Point of view of NGOs, lines 129-135: «And then, regardless of the case, there are perhaps many people who also have the right in France, people who become in an irregular situation who did not have a residence permit for one or two years and who for one reason or another no longer have one... No, I place all this within the framework of a wider context which is nevertheless the weakening of residence permits, it’s really not easy to have a residence permit for one year and to have to have it renewed, er, constantly, there are long waiting periods and, well, all of these waiting periods increase irregularity”.

Point of view of NGOs, 22/06/2011, lines 71-80: "Yes, I think that the policy is nevertheless rather formal. If I take another example, we had a family who is not in the system of asylum seekers, who had a residence permit in another European country, who came to Luxembourg for three months. During this period they found work, they made an application for our centre, for stay for paid workers which was initially refused because the people had not made the application from the country where they resided, so the other European country. So at times there are things like that, it is nevertheless complicated and difficult, people have the right to move around for the three months, but they must return home”.

and personnel from private security firms), 30 of which look after border control\textsuperscript{155}. While the unit underwent major reinforcement of its human resources in 2006 and from 21 May 2008 with the opening of a new "Terminal A" (the SCF was reinforced with 2 elements). No reinforcements are planned for the years to come\textsuperscript{156}.

Another department, the Travel Documents Department (SDV) was also reinforced with 2 additional police officers. The SDV is presently comprised of 5 specialists in the domain of false documents. They undertake called ‘second line’ control, i.e. a more in-depth analysis than the identity control undertaken by the first line officials and an in-depth study of the travel documents shown by the traveller. These police civil servants, due to their expertise, make up the national skills centre in assessments for all official documents. In this way they undertake a part of the on-going internal training of members of the SCF. They manage and update databases like FADO and look after statistics relating to the external border.

All passengers and teams passing through terminal A and GAT (General Aviation Terminal) coming from or going to "Non-Schengen" countries must pass the border control before entering or leaving Luxembourgish territory. The control procedures are comprised of\textsuperscript{157}:

- prior verification of the "APIS\textsuperscript{158}" lists for all flights coming from "Non-Schengen" countries;
- verification of the validity and authenticity of the travel documents by using specialist equipment available at the counters ;
- consultation of computer databases (SIS, Interpol, etc) by using the "Passport reader" and, for biometric passports, the "chip verifier";
- comparison of the photo of the document with the physiognomy of the traveller, analysis "imposter";
- different assessments of the traveller depending on the purpose of their stay (touristic visit, student, business trip, traveller in a group or alone);
- the use of the "profiling" method which consists of asking questions, checking linguistic skills, checking the "routing", verifying the plane ticket as to the place of depart and the destination, observing the traveller’s behaviour\textsuperscript{159}.

The SCA possesses two "Dokucenter" type devices, model 4500 which can verify the authenticity of an official document. To conduct this analysis, several technologies (oblique illumination, detection of invisible security marks, and analysis of printing technique) are implemented\textsuperscript{160}. Complying with the Schengen Border Code, all the counters operational in Terminal A are fitted with a "passport reader" document reader by the "Bundesdruckerei" enabling to verify the following details:

- reading of the MRZ (machine readable zone);
- reading of the integrated chip and its contents - comparison of the content of the integrated chip with the data registered on the travel document.

At the same time, a number of actions were undertaken to implement the tools necessary for the connection to the European systems SIS II and VIS. Furthermore, the extension of the SIS for integration of new Member States within the "SISone4all" context and implementation of the border control tools fitted with biometric technologies and biometric information capture tools must be mentioned.

The border control includes not only verifications of persons who present themselves at the counters, but also risk analyses as regards irregular immigration. The SCA is the unit responsible for this risk analysis at the Airport of Luxembourg and for drawing up bi-monthly reports based on the FRAN of the Frontex statistics and reports\textsuperscript{161}, and intended for all members of the department.

The "profiling" method, used by officials of the SCA in Luxembourg, also focuses on flights coming from and bound for Schengen and non-Schengen countries and is based on risk analysis originating from Frontex monitoring. With the same goal in mind, members of the SCA make sure they undertake regular and random controls at strategic areas of Luxembourg airport, in particular near the departure and arrival gates and at the "check-in" counters. According to the people questioned, the controls of passengers are done unannounced, are not systematic, not discriminatory and are undertaken in the respect of human rights.

\textbf{3.2.2. Verification of means of subsistence}

\textsuperscript{160} The purchase of these two devices which the Grand Ducal Police have at present, goes back to the year 2001 respectively 2005. Given the technological evolution in this domain, it is practical to replace at least the oldest model with a new device with state-of-the-art technology. After so many years of use it will be necessary to replace it with a new model. The purchase of this equipment, the price of which amounts to €100,000, should take place in 2012/2013.

\textsuperscript{161} Frontex has a data collection system enabling to generate large trends and forecasts as regards irregular migration, for example, source of falsified papers, irregular migration routes identified, age group of the persons concerned. The control officials at the Luxembourg Airport border rely on this ‘objective and classified’ data.
According to the entry conditions registered in the Schengen Borders Code, border officials have the right to verify the means of subsistence (financial resources) of persons entering the territory\textsuperscript{162}. Although the Code stipulates that the national authorities set the reference amounts required for crossing their external borders, these amounts remain to be defined by the competent Luxembourgish authorities\textsuperscript{163}. The lack of a specific amount for evaluation of the means of subsistence may nevertheless pose problems of objectivity for officials of the SCA who allocate a broad margin of interpretation\textsuperscript{164}. This has had as a result that no refusals of entry have been issued based on insufficient means of subsistence at Luxembourg’s external border over the last few years.

3.2.3. Commitment in the context of FRONTEX

Cooperation and good relationships with the airport managers in the adjacent regions (Hahn, Liege, Metz, Zaventem) is of obvious importance to ensure on-going cooperation with regard to migration\textsuperscript{165}.

Moreover, participation in seminars or training courses organised by FRONTEX is considered an indispensable source of skill acquisition on irregular immigration networks within the context of border control.

\textsuperscript{162} Article 5(3). Assessment of the means of subsistence (for the envisaged duration of the stay as well as for the return to the country of origin or transit to a third-country) is done depending on the duration and purpose of the stay and by reference to the average prices as regards housing and food in the Member State or Member States concerned, for moderately-priced accommodation, multiplied by the number of days of stay. Assessment of sufficient means of subsistence can be based on the possession of cash, traveller’s cheques and credit cards by the third-country national. Declarations of payment, when they are stipulated by national law, and letter of guarantee as defined by national law, in the case of third-country nationals housed with an inhabitant, may also constitute proof of sufficient means of subsistence, http://eur-lex.europa.eu/LexUriServ/LexUriServ.do?uri=CELEX:32006R0562:FR:NOT http://eur-lex.europa.eu/LexUriServ/LexUriServ.do?uri=CELEX:32006R0562:FR:NOT \textsuperscript{163} “The third-country national who seeks entry to the territory of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg complying with Article 34 of the law must justify that s/her has sufficient personal resources for the duration of the stay as well as for return to the country of origin or transit to another country. Justification of the resources required is done in particular by presentation of cash, traveller’s cheques or credit cards as well as by presentation of a document attesting the possibility of legally obtaining the necessary means. Justification of the required resources may also be done by the production of letters of credit issued by a banking establishment or a confirmation of payment in the cases stipulated by Article 34, paragraph (3) of the law.

(2) The accompanying documents listed in paragraph (1) preceding, are assessed taking into account the duration and purpose of the stay. At the same time, the national police authorities participated in a number of FRONTEX operations and activities. As with all FRONTEX activity, the joint operations are based on risk analyses. In general, three types of situations may lead to a joint operation:

a) the FRONTEX agency proposes a joint operation on the basis of facts identified during a risk analysis,

b) proposal of a joint operation or a pilot project originating from a Member State\(^{166}\) or
c) a request for a joint operation is presented by a Member State facing a particular situation. In the second hypothetical case, the proposal is assessed by FRONTEX and the joint operation or pilot project may be co-financed by the Agency in the form of a subsidy\(^ {167}\).

In 2009\textsuperscript{170}, Luxembourg took part in the following operations/activities and training:

Operations:

- Operation NEPTUN: 1 participation

Trainings:
- RABIT (basic training): 5 participations
- Mid-level course: 1 participation

Working parties:
- FRONTEX risk analyses network: 4 participations

Besides the operations, training courses and work meetings summarized verbatim above, the Grand Ducal Police participated in a number of seminars organised by FRONTEX in different domains, such as biometry and new developments with regard to border control. Moreover, since 2009 the Police have been putting together monthly statistical sheets and analyses within the context of the FRAN risk analysis project.

Luxembourg has committed to make available to FRONTEX, if needed, various items of technical equipment, such as equipment related to the in verification of travel documents. In addition, a CESSNA 208 GRAND CARAVAN type plane is regularly made available to FRONTEX, especially during joint operations (JO HERA, JO NAUTILUS, JO POSEIDON, JO JUPITER, JO NEPTUN, JO SATURN) having as mission the surveillance of the land and maritime borders. The mission flying hours are for the most part financed by the Grand Duchy.

3.2.4. Training courses (outside of the FRONTEX framework)

Besides the training courses offered by FRONTEX, a number of training courses on border control exist, in Luxembourg and abroad\(^{173}\). The special training course "Policing of the Borders" is mandatory for all police officers allocated to the UCPA, whether in SCA or in SGA. Following a 6 months’ secondment which acts simultaneously as a period of preparation for the admission examination, the new border guards, having passed the examination, are allocated to the Airport police. It is necessary to specify that the basic training for future border guards complies with the requirements of the Common Core Curriculum (CCC) drawn up by FRONTEX. The special training course "Policing at the Borders" is also open to all police officers interested in the subject. Abroad, the Criminal Police Department (SPJ) participated in courses of specialisation at foreign police training schools such the ‘Akademie der Polizei Baden-Württemberg’, ‘BKA Wiesbaden’ and ‘Landespolizeeschule Rheinland-Pfalz’ on topics such as trafficking of narcotics, protection of minors, economic and financial crime, sexual offences, terrorism, clandestine immigration and cyber criminality.

3.3. Stay: practical measures undertaken to control irregular migration in the (Member) State’s territory

As already previously mentioned, the Immigration Minister may conduct controls or have controls carried out to verify if the conditions set for entry and stay of foreigners are fulfilled. This verification, however, cannot be systematic.\textsuperscript{174}.

The Labour Inspectorate (ITM)\textsuperscript{175}, placed under the political authority of the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Immigration, is the competent national authority as regards application of the clauses concerning secondment of workers. Its role is to ensure application of all of the legislation relating to working conditions and the protection of workers having a work contract. The ITM is responsible for checking working conditions, and particular employees, working hours and holidays and cross-border secondment of employees. Accordingly, routine control and inspection visits are organised throughout the year in every activity sector. The ITM must ensure that the standards relating to illegal or illegal work are respected including the stipulations regarding work permits for workers from third-countries who are not nationals of a Member State of the European Economic Area.\textsuperscript{176} Labour inspectors\textsuperscript{177} have access to any work place without notice and can undertake checks, inspections or inquiries at any time of the day or night (questioning of any employer included) enabling to establish if the legislation is respected or not. They can demand communication from any paper, register, file or document relating to the working conditions and the display of the information stipulated by the legislation concerned.

Faced with the conclusions of the controls, the inspectors may issue an order requiring to remedy within a given period the faults or shortcomings arising from non-respect of the clauses of the concerned legislation. The director and deputy directors have the power to issue an order of immediate cease of work and evacuation of the premises.

In particular, between 2007 and 2010, the secondment and illegal work department (SDTI) of the ITM took on the tasks of fighting illegal work in general, thus ensuring a driving and organisational function within the framework of the inter-administrative cell against illegal work which also forms part of the Customs Administration. This cell can mobilise over 200 officials from 6 to 8 Ministries or administrations. It contributes actively to "high-impact" actions organised on work sites or in companies, as well as "after work" actions, i.e. controls between 5pm and 9pm, having as the principal target illegal/clandestine work as well as provision of additional hours. During the year 2010, the SDTI merged with the ‘Luxembourghish Liaison Secondment Bureau (BLLD). Generally, the high-impact actions of a broad scope took place with controls of a smaller size over the years.

In 2007, 11 major actions, 3 specific actions against illegal work, approximately 35 medium-size actions and 181 small-scale controls were conducted.

In 2008, 7 major actions, 6 specific actions against illegal work on the basis of denunciations, approximately 23 medium-size actions, 15 control actions as regards "organised illegal work" during weekends and 367 small-scale controls were carried out.

In 2009, 2 major actions, 30 specific actions against illegal work (of a proactive nature or based on external information), approximately 28 medium-size actions, 15 control actions as regards "organised illegal work" during weekends and 271 reduced size controls were carried out.

In 2010, the emphasis was put on the fight against illegal work. With this in mind, 17 control actions on ‘organised illegal work’ were conducted during weekends, as well as 3 ‘after work’ actions, i.e. between 5pm and 9pm during the week with the target being illegal/clandestine work as well as control of additional work hours.

The officials of the ASCAB Division (the Customs and Excise Administration) actively participated in planning and coordination of control rounds and high-impact actions in several domains, in particular: - health and safety of work sites; - secondment of foreign companies; - control of authorisations of classified, unsanitary or inconvenient establishments; - stable establishments; - illegal work. Activities of the ASCAB Division in 2010: 390 controls linked to illegal work. Reports regarding illegal work in 2010: 48.

ASCAB Division 2009 controls: illegal work: 515; illegal work on Saturdays: 83; sanctions/ reports for illegal work: 49.

In consultation with the administrations concerned, like for example the ITM, the Grand Ducal Police conducts controls as regards illegal work/social dumping.

3.3.1. Placement in detention

Until the opening of the new Detention Centre, people in an irregular situation were detained in a separate section of Luxembourg Penitentiary Centre in Schrassig. Faced with the limited capacity and the impossibility of arranging separate sections, a maximum of 25 individuals of the masculine gender could be placed there. Families waiting to be removed were placed in the AIDA centre, located within the airport, for a stay which could be from 24 to 72 hours\textsuperscript{182}. Placement of migrants in an irregular situation in a section, even separate, of the Penitentiary Centre was criticized on a number of occasions by institutions, national, international\textsuperscript{183} and associations for the protection of human rights\textsuperscript{184}. The legitimacy and detention conditions of foreigners in a situation of irregular stay were therefore raised on several occasions in 2010. A decision by the Administrative Court\textsuperscript{185} ordered the immediate release of a person detained given that the complainant was detained in the Detention Centre for persons in an irregular situation installed in Luxembourg Penitentiary Centre in Schrassig and the anticipated time limit by decree of the Administrative Court of 2 April 2009 to close the Detention Centre at the CPL had expired\textsuperscript{186}. The Government appealed against the decision of the Administrative Court by assessing that placement of persons within the Penitentiary Centre in a unit separate from that of the detainees responded to the clauses of Article 16.1 of the "returns directive". The Administrative Court, in an extraordinary public hearing of 15 October 2010 (decree 27345), finally reformed the decision in the first instance by declaring that the Residential Centre for persons in an irregular situation, located in Luxembourg Penitentiary Centre in Schrassig, responded in principle to the requirements of Article 120 (1) of the law of 29 August 2008 on the entry and stay of foreigners, therefore stating that the government was correct\textsuperscript{187}.

The new Detention Centre is a closed structure with the mission to accommodate persons who are subject to a placement in detention with a view to their removal to their country of origin or the country they came from. The centre is placed under the authority of the Minister of Immigration.

which constitutes in itself a major change compared to the former situation. The former centre was under the responsibility of the Minister of Justice since the latter was situated within the Penitentiary Centre. This situation has not always facilitated processing of the cases of detained persons. While the centre responded hierarchically to the Minister of Justice, detention came under the authority of the Minister of Immigration.

The new Detention Centre is located near the airport enclosure. Domestic security is the responsibility of the Centre officials and external security is undertaken by the Grand Ducal Police. It has separate sections for families and women.

Different associations have welcomed the building of a detention centre separate from the penitentiary enclosure, as well as fixing the detention regime by law. They have also hailed the references made to respecting the human dignity and basic rights of the person as well as the desire to put in place psychosocial supervision.

The negative criticisms during the legislation process have focused in particular on the powers conferred to the director and the absence of precise means of recourse, in particular against disciplinary sanctions. In addition, the specific requirements of vulnerable groups have not been sufficiently taken into account according to different published opinions (Council of State, LFR, CCDH). The Parliamentary Commission responsible for the case had the intention of responding to the different criticisms by introducing in particular a number of amendments. However, the different amendments have not sufficed to silence the critics, especially after a visit of the premises conducted by different representatives of civil society, journalists and MPs. They focused in

The powers stipulated for the director in the initial bill were reduced in the law as it was adopted.
191 We observe that the Council of State and the CCDH opinions take into account directives and directive proposals. The Council of State therefore notes that Article 17 of the return directive regarding guarantees of privacy for families during planning of accommodation should be taken into consideration by the Grand Ducal regulation setting the practical terms and conditions of the detention regime. The CCDH is guided for its part by Article 11 of the directive proposal reforming the Reception Directive to request the adoption, prior to any detention measures, of a mechanism for examination of the individual situation of persons for whom detention would deteriorate their state of physical, emotional and mental health, http://www.chd.lu/wps/portal/public/RoleEtendu?action=doDocpaDetails&id=6218 http://www.chd.lu/wps/portal/public/RoleEtendu?action=doDocpaDetails&id=6218# particular on:

- the architecture and layout of the Detention Centre which is considered sterile and with a functionality barely respectful of privacy (for example the need to go through the living rooms to access the showers);
- the increase in the maximum duration of the administrative detention which can be up to 6 months;
- the lack of alternative measures to placement in detention, the legislator only holding a compulsory residence order;
- the definition of the ‘risk of absconding’, considered as being too ‘broad’ from the viewpoint of the LFR\textsuperscript{193}, especially bearing in mind that this notion remains the essential criterion within the context of a decision of placement in detention. According to the LFR, the legislator, by assuming a risk of absconding of a foreigner\textsuperscript{194} who stays on the territory over and above the duration of his/her visa or right to stay, assimilates de facto the situation of a person in an irregular situation with that of a person presenting a risk of absconding. This broad definition, combined with the large hosting capacity of the new centre (maximum of 87 persons), has left the NGOs to assume that detention is becoming the rule and compulsory residence order the exception\textsuperscript{195}.

Finally, the LFR believes that the resort to the use of force during forced removals should not be allowed except in the case of force majeure. The Collective defends the idea of the presence of independent observers not only during the trip itself but also during the phase preceding boarding\textsuperscript{196}.

3.4. Pathways out of irregularity

3.4.1. 'Voluntary' or forced return

According to the government, the fight against irregular immigration must be based on a consistent return (voluntary or not) policy of irregularly staying persons. Return policy remains an indispensable addition to a consistent immigration and asylum policy.\textsuperscript{197}

The Directorate of Immigration is the public administration responsible for arranging forced returns of irregularly staying persons. Forced returns are carried out by regular commercial flights or by national or European charter flights and receive support from the European Return Fund. As regards European flights, Luxembourg is involved in flights organised by FRONTEX.

In parallel, the Directorate of Immigration is trying to promote voluntary returns of refused DPIs and persons in an irregular situation.\textsuperscript{198}

In order to make concrete and stimulate voluntary returns, the Ministry signed a cooperation project with IOM relating to assistance with voluntary return and reintegration for third-country nationals their country of origin. The first programme which covered the period from 1 August 2008 to 15 March 2009 was limited to rejected international protection seekers who were nationals of Kosovo, and for whom tolerance measures were no longer extended. The second programme, which initially covered the period from 1 August 2009 to 31 December 2009, was extended for the year 2010. It is no longer applied to a particular group of people or to a defined geographical zone, but to all foreigners in an irregular situation. It focuses on, besides rejected international protection seekers, third-country nationals who have been in an irregular situation in Luxembourg for at least 12 months and who have not submitted an application for international protection.\textsuperscript{199}

Return support comprises return assistance (during the departure from Luxembourg, transit and arrival in the country of origin), reintegration assistance which covers the immediate needs of the people, in particular housing and clothing costs up to a maximum limit of €1500. Return assistance \textsuperscript{197} Foreign Affairs Ministry, 2009 Annual Report.

\textsuperscript{199} Between August (date of effective launch of the project) and the end of December 2009, the IOM entered 61 requests for information into the programme. 39 people have enrolled in the programme all of whom have returned: 36 people in 2009 and three in January 2010. The great majority of persons returned come from Kosovo and other Balkan countries. The persons returned received help with reintegration to cover their immediate needs after their return, especially as regards housing. Furthermore, the IOM gave in 24 cases assistance with setting up a micro-business and on two occasions help with looking for work. Two medical cases received additional assistance for vulnerable people. However, all of the people were not repatriated at the same time. The Government decided to remove as a priority people not having children at school as well as people not receiving authorisation for temporary occupation.
may also include financial support in the form of additional assistance (maximum value of €1500) for putting in place an income-generating activity or in the form of help finding a job (value of €600). Follow-up help by IOM in the countries of origin may extend over 6 months after the return.\textsuperscript{200}

Besides the "voluntary" or forced return, the national legislation stipulates alternatives for people for whom (well-defined) reasons cannot be removed. In fact, the modified law of 29 August 2008 on the free movement of persons and immigration stipulates three options which justify prevention of removal\textsuperscript{201}. The first one establishes that a person in an irregular situation and simultaneously being the subject of an extradition request cannot be removed\textsuperscript{202}. A second hypothetical case is that where prevention of removal is justified, if the foreigner establishes that his/her life and/or liberty are gravely threatened in the country to which s/he has to be removed or even if s/he runs the risk of being exposed to treatment contrary to Article 3 of the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Liberties\textsuperscript{203}. Lastly, Article 130 of the modified law of 29 August 2008 stipulates that "on condition that s/he does not constitute a threat to public order or to public safety, the foreigner may not be removed from the territory if s/he establishes at least by medical certificates that his/her state of health necessitates medical treatment the lack of which would result in consequences of exceptional gravity for him/her, and if s/he provides proof that s/he cannot receive appropriate treatment in the country to which s/he is likely to be removed"\textsuperscript{204}. Removal may in these cases be postponed by six months for medical reasons following receipt of a medical certificate justified by the Immigration Medical Department (SMI - Service Médical de l’Immigration)\textsuperscript{205}. This certificate enables him/her to remain on the territory without being authorised to stay and confers on him/her the right to medical treatment and social assistance. The suspension is renewable, not exceeding the duration of two years\textsuperscript{206}. Furthermore, the Minister may \textsuperscript{205} This department, created in 2008, is a department dependent on the Health Ministry, attached to the Health Management/Health at Work Division. It applies the clauses of the Modified law of 29 August 2008 on the free movement of persons and immigration and the Grand Ducal regulation of 3 February 2009 relating to medical checks of foreigners. The applicant of a residence permit (third-country national) must undergo a mandatory medical examination from entry to the country, aiming to screen for infectious diseases, in particular tuberculosis. In 2010, 1366 consultations took place among these people, coming from 87 different countries.

\textsuperscript{206} If, on expiry of the two-year period mentioned in paragraph (1) preceding, the foreigner provides evidence that his/her state of health as described in Article 130 persists, s/he can obtain a residence permit for medical reason for the duration of the treatment, without which this duration cannot exceed one year. If necessary this authorisation can be renewed, after re-examination of his/her situation. The Minister may, if need be, extend reception of the measures.
grant the recipient provisional occupation authorisation for a maximum period of six months, renewable for an identical duration which may not however exceed the duration of the suspension of removal. In 2010, 259 medical certificates were issued\textsuperscript{207}. The principal groups of migrants concerned were mainly nationals of Kosovo (108 medical certificates in 2010), followed by nationals of African countries (81 medical certificates in 2010) and countries of the former Yugoslavia with the exception of Kosovo (46 medical certificates in 2010). 143 of these medical certificates, which correspond to a rate of 55\%, gave rise to suspension of removal in 2010. Among the diseases which were the basis of motivations of medical certificates issued and therefore suspension of removal, were particular psychiatric (34.7\%), cardiology (9.2\%), infectious (8.9\%) and neurological (8.5\%) problems\textsuperscript{208}.

\textbf{3.4.2. Measures of tolerance – Removal postponements}\textsuperscript{209}

With the law of 1 July 2011 which modifies the modified law of 5 May 2006, the measure of tolerance stipulated by the former article 22 was repealed and replaced by a measure of postponement of removal for justified purposes.

The former text stipulated granting a declaration of tolerance for persons for whom concrete execution of removal proved impossible due to circumstances of fact, therefore authorising him/her to remain provisionally on the territory up until the point when these circumstances of fact have ceased\textsuperscript{210}. The municipal administration of the place of residence of the interested party had to focus on the declaration. The declaration did not however give the right to issue a residence certificate\textsuperscript{211} but conferred the right to social assistance\textsuperscript{212}. This declaration may be followed by an authorisation for temporary occupation, valid for a determined employer and for a single profession and issued by the Minister for the declaration validity period.\textsuperscript{213}

\textsuperscript{207} Immigration medical department, internal document 2011.

\textsuperscript{212} Modified law of 5 May 2006 relating to the right of asylum and additional forms of protection, Article 6 (7).
\textsuperscript{213}(6) Granting and renewing temporary occupation authorisation may be refused for reasons relating to the situation,
Article 125a of the modified law of 29 August 2008 replaces the measure of tolerance with the measure of postponement of removal. Under the terms of this Article, the Minister may postpone removal for a determined period while the foreigner can justify the impossibility of leaving the territory for reasons outside of his/her control or if the removal violates the principle of non-return as stipulated by Article 129. So, the foreigner can remain provisionally on the territory, without being authorised to stay there. As for the tolerance status, it is not a provisional type of residence permit, but an authorised to stay on the territory while awaiting the possibility of removal. The recipient of the postponement decision may furthermore be granted humanitarian assistance or even temporary occupation authorisation for the duration of the removal postponement\textsuperscript{214}.

Access to education for minor of an age to attend the education system is stipulated, likewise with taking into account the specific needs of vulnerable persons\textsuperscript{215}, the definition of which was integrally resumed by Article 3, paragraph (9), of the 2008/115/EC Directive\textsuperscript{216}. The decision to postpone the removal may be combined with a compulsory residence order\textsuperscript{217}.

The conditions linked to granting a tolerance measure, particularly evidence as to the physical impossibility of execution of the removal, have been called into question in the last few years. In practice, several decisions by the Ministry reject an extension of the tolerance due to a lack of evidence as to the impossibility of physical execution of the removal. The administrative jurisdictions also claim that it is up to the interested party to demonstrate the existence of circumstances of fact preventing physical execution of his/her removal. The Administrative Court regularly reiterates that the reference to the general situation in the country of origin would not be of a kind to render impossible the physical execution of the removal order\textsuperscript{218}.

So, the LFR asked the MAE and the administrative jurisdictions to reconsider their approach regarding the burden of proof for obtaining a status of tolerance\textsuperscript{219}.

If, from a legislative point of view, return decisions appear clear, it remains nevertheless to emphasize that in practice, more complex situations exist. The legislation certainly stipulates measures for certain concrete cases, particularly in the case of postponement of removal or suspension of removal for medical reasons. Moreover it must be specified that these measures are temporary and may only be renewed after an assessment of evolution of the personal situation of the concerned parties or of the situation in the country of origin\textsuperscript{220}.

If beforehand the suspension of removal as stipulated by the law with the objective of maintaining the dignity of the migrant by avoiding putting in danger the life of the person concerned, the temporary and uncertain nature of these suspensions plunges the concerned parties into "grey areas" between non-regularisation and non-return, which raises a number of questions as to access and enjoyment of a certain number of basic rights. It is equally true that suspension of removal may result in granting of a temporary authorisation to stay for medical reasons\textsuperscript{221}.

As regards return, concrete situations were cited by NGOs working in the field in Luxembourg. In the case of unaccompanied minors, applicants of international protection, cases are known for which processing of the files were extended until the age of legal majority of the individual concerned\textsuperscript{222}. If no return decision can be made against an unaccompanied minor unless this is in the greater interest of the child\textsuperscript{223}, once adults, the same individuals risk being considered as migrants without the right of stay and become "irregular migrants".

In other cases, return, be it forced or voluntary, proves impossible for physical reasons. This situation concerns in particular nationals of countries like Somalia, Eritrea and Sudan because travel documents and personal or administrative documents such as birth certificates are lacking\textsuperscript{224}. To respond to these concrete situations the Luxembourgish NGOs demand regularisation alternatives, clearly defined, while taking into account the diversity of living situations of the people concerned\textsuperscript{225}.

The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg does not have a generalised practise of regularisation but rather regularisations are done on a case-by-case basis, with three exceptions: the general regularisation campaign conducted in 2001 and regularisations of Bosnian refugees and workers of Portuguese origin, in 1995 and 1985 respectively.\(^{226}\)

The 2001 regularisation operation was moreover a reaction to the large number of asylum seekers coming from the former Yugoslavia (75% of the immigrants regularised were people natives of the former Yugoslavia).\(^{227}\) Furthermore, the 2001 regularisation was conducted taking into account the lack of labour force in certain economic sectors.

It should also be noted that the Minister of Immigration, before the new law on asylum of 5 May 2006 and the law on the free movement of persons and immigration of 29 August 2008 regularly granted, on a case-by-case basis, residence permits for humanitarian reasons to persons without the right of stay. These authorisations to stay were in particular issued for the following reasons: risk of inhuman or degrading treatment in the case of return to their country of origin, family life in Luxembourg, serious illness.\(^{228}\)

In 2009, the Minister of Immigration decided to regularise on the basis of their case a certain number of rejected international protection seekers by granting them a temporary residence permit after obtaining a work permit (75 individuals).\(^{229}\) In 2010, 347 people, the majority of them natives of Kosovo, were regularised by the mission. During presentation of the assessment as regards asylum and immigration relating to 2010, the Minister of Immigration estimated that this regularisation by the mission "constituted[d] the right route to follow". He stressed within this context the need to "put in place a specific department within ADEM which could offer work to these populations."\(^{230}\)

Article 89 of the modified law of 29 August 2008 stipulates the possibility for the Minister in charge of immigration to grant an authorisation to stay as a special case to people residing without authorisation in Luxembourg in cases where they fulfil well-defined conditions\textsuperscript{231}. Applicants for regularisation must provide in particular evidence of continuous residency and have exercised a habitual occupation in Luxembourg for at least eight years\textsuperscript{232}.

Article 89 and the conditions of continuity were strongly criticised by the NGOs and associations. These conditions are deemed too restrictive and as a result do not enable reasonable use of the disposition. Particularly the obligation of proof of residence and of a habitual professional occupation for 8 years was called into question. People in an irregular situation not only encounter practical difficulties in presenting the necessary evidence which arises directly from their situation of irregularity (lack of employment contract, no certificate of affiliation, difficulty in documenting the number of hours worked or remuneration). On the other hand, the law penalises and stipulates sanctions for moonlighting and illegal work relationships\textsuperscript{233}. Potential applicants for regularisation but also bosses are rather reluctant to start such a procedure for fear of reprisals. Lastly, still according to a certain number of associations, the assessment of the evidence provided (testimonial declarations) would be too subjective. Thus, declarations from employers would often be analysed as simple confirmations and would not be considered as proof of work\textsuperscript{234}.

The NGOs suggest that granting a residence permit is linked to future prospects of finding a job rather than to evidence of clandestinity in the past and also propose reducing the period by at least two years (from eight to six).

By virtue of the principles of transparency and equality of treatment, the Ombudsman recommended clarification and publication of the criterion on which the decisions of the Minister are based\textsuperscript{235}.

From a ministerial point of view, Article 89 remains a political compromise, a transitory provision introduced during adoption of the law of 29 August 2008 enabling regularisation on a case-by-case basis\textsuperscript{236} and following up the request of the NGOs to undertake a general regularisation (which was not accepted).

Over and above Article 89, the legislator stipulated the issue of a residence permit for private reasons based on humanitarian motives of exceptional gravity\textsuperscript{237}. Relaxation of the conditions of granting a residence permit for humanitarian reasons were hailed during adoption of the modified law\textsuperscript{238} insofar as where the applicant for such a permit does not have to demonstrate the existence of sufficient resources or even that s/he has suitable accommodation. On the other hand, different organisations have criticized the restrictive transposition of the directive: actually the legislator maintains the formulation according to which the interested party may obtain a residence permit for humanitarian reasons of \textit{exceptional gravity} while Article 6(4) of the directive stipulates that a Member State can regularise a person for charitable, humanitarian or other reasons.

The criteria of interpretation on situations which constitute humanitarian reasons of ‘exceptional gravity’ were for their part the subject of strong criticisms\textsuperscript{239}.

\textsuperscript{239} Point of view of NGOs, 11/07/2011, lines 287-293 "Let’s take the example of the residence permit for private reasons or one of the opening cases; these are humanitarian circumstance of exceptional gravity. So it is for them a lever to do a case-by-case assessment. You can’t really generalise by country, because it’s not possible, already, we have insufficient knowledge of all of the cases processed, but we see that for cases of exceptional gravity it is very low and we skip it with no problems, and for the other it is at the maximum, you’ll never get there". In its 2008/2009 activity report, the mediator requests that the Minister specifies and makes public the criteria which guide it in its decision making on applications for regularisation based on Article 89 of the law on immigration. Regarding the claims of Kosovo nationals for which the measure of tolerance has not been extended, the mediator suggests to the Ministry to let itself be guided by the criteria set out in Article 103 of the aforementioned law, even if this Article does not apply to these people. 4. TRANSNATIONAL COOPERATION FOR REDUCING IRREGULAR MIGRATION

4.1 Cooperation agreements

On 27 May 2005 Luxembourg signed the Prüm treaty\textsuperscript{240}, which aims to intensify trans-border police cooperation and exchanges between agencies of the Member States responsible for ensuring respect of the legislation to fight organised crime, terrorism and irregular immigration.

Over and above signing of the Prüm treaty, a police and customs cooperation agreement\textsuperscript{241} was signed on 24 October 2008 between Germany, Belgium, France and Luxembourg, with a view to reinforcement of the trans-border cooperation between their respective police and customs authorities. The latter follows the principles already adopted for agreements signed between France and Luxembourg in 2001 and creating the "Police and Customs Cooperation Centre (CCPD)" and between Germany, Belgium and Luxembourg setting up a "Police Cooperation Bureau (BCCP)", creating in this way the first cooperation centre in Europe in which the competent authorities from four different countries are brought together. The cooperation agreement aims to better guarantee security in the border zones and to reinforce the resources to fight the diverse forms of serious crime: trafficking in human being, drug trafficking, irregular immigration and serious attacks on property.

Located in Luxembourg and with a total labour force of 30 people (14 for France, 5 for Germany, 6 for Luxembourg and 6 for Belgium), the centre is authorised in particularly to:

a) collect, analyse and exchange the information necessary for police and customs cooperation, including periodical common evaluation of the border situation;

b) facilitate the preparation and execution of trans-border police and costumes missions

\textsuperscript{240} The Prüm treaty or agreement was signed by seven EU Member States: Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Spain. Bulgaria, Finland, Italy, Portugal, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia and Sweden must still adhere to it. The clauses of the Prüm treaty focusing on police cooperation and on exchanges of information on DNA profiles and digital fingerprints were transposed within the legal framework of the European Union and following a decision of the Council dated 23 June 2008 (Council decision 2008/606/JHA).

4.1.1. Readmission agreements

Generally, the readmission agreements aim to facilitate the removal "of persons who do not fulfil, or no longer fulfil the conditions of entry, presence or stay in the applicant State"\textsuperscript{242}. They are considered as an essential means to reduce irregular immigration, whether it is at the bilateral, intergovernmental or Community level. Since the entry into force of the treaty of Lisbon, the European Parliament has been authorised to approve Community readmission agreements\textsuperscript{243}. Luxembourg has neither negotiated nor signed the bilateral readmission agreement. The agreements applicable to Luxembourg were negotiated either with the partners of Benelux, or within the framework of the Schengen Area or they are agreements negotiated by the European Commission on approval granted by the Council of the European Union.

\textit{a) Benelux readmission agreements}

The "Benelux" readmission agreements initially concern agreements with other European Union Member States. Whereas some go back to the period of the start of European construction and integration\textsuperscript{244}, others are more recent and were in general (but not always) negotiated before EU membership of these countries\textsuperscript{245}. Nothing excludes the possibility of negotiating an agreement with another European Union Member State or renegotiating the existing agreements. Thus, the agreement entered into between France and Benelux in 1964 is actually subject to a new negotiation, in order to adapt the form and content to the present standards\textsuperscript{246}.

Within the context of return policy, Benelux more recently signed (on 3 June 2009) a readmission agreement with Armenia.

The return and readmission agreement signed between the Ministers of BENELUX responsible for immigration and the Kosovar Minister of the Interior on 12 May 2011 has the objective of defining practical terms and conditions for the readmission of people residing without authorisation who have to leave the territory. The Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg agreed on the need to negotiate such an agreement with Kosovo in order to, on one hand, improve cooperation with this country, and on the other, provide a precise legal framework for the return measures. Finally, another sought goal is to facilitate as far as possible the issue of travel documents with a view to return. The clauses of the return and re-admission agreement apply on one hand to all citizens of Benelux, and on the other, to nationals of the Republic of Kosovo, whatever their ethnic origin. They apply moreover to third-country nationals having transited through the territories of the Contracting Parties.

b) Schengen readmission agreements

Luxembourg signed a single Schengen readmission agreement on 29 March 1991, in this particular case with Poland.

c) Community readmission agreements

Several readmission agreements were negotiated by the European Commission on the Authority of the European Council. The latter are substituted by bilateral agreements in cases where such agreements exist.

The readmission agreements and their application protocols have the purpose of defining the obligations and clear procedures to be respected by the Contracting Parties, particularly by indication of time periods and terms and conditions of return of persons staying irregularly. Due to their highly specific nature, clauses in relation to readmission rarely form an integral part of other forms of agreements. As a result of the preceding clauses, Luxembourg, on the bilateral basis, has not signed such mixed agreements.

At present Luxembourg has just one liaison officer with Europol. The liaison officer is responsible via the national unit for representing the interests of the latter at Europol complying with national law and respecting the applicable clauses in the functioning of Europol. In this way, the liaison officer contributes to the exchange of information between the national units in Luxembourg and Europol ("mutual police assistance")\textsuperscript{250}.

However, based on the common use of the network of BENELUX liaison officers, Luxembourg can resort to Belgian or Dutch liaison officers allocated to one or more accredited Member States, or even to one or more international organisations\textsuperscript{251}.

5. IMPACT OF THE EUROPEAN POLICY AND LEGISLATION ON IRREGULAR MIGRATION

5.1.1. "Returns directive"

The "returns directive" was transposed by the Law of 1 July 2011.

5.1.2. 'Sanction directive'

Transposition of Council Directive 2009/52/EC (called the "sanctions directive" of the Council of 18 June 2009 providing for minimum standards on sanctions and measures against employers of illegally staying third-country nationals has not yet been done, even though Luxembourg had partially anticipated transposition of the same directive in the Law of 29 August 2008 focusing on the free movement of persons and immigration stipulating sanctions relating to irregular migration (Articles 139 to 148). The bill having to transpose the directive has not yet been submitted to the Council of Government\textsuperscript{252}.

Furthermore, the Minister emphasized that the present law already contains provisions for sanctions of a pecuniary type against employers resorting to illegal work. However, a large part of the directive remains to be transposed, particularly regarding exclusion of reception of services or public subsidies and participation in procedures of execution of public contracts and the recovery of public subsidies granted to the employer.

5.1.3. EU readmission agreements

See also 4.1.1

Between 2009 and 2010, 74 persons were removed from Luxembourg on the basis of Community agreements (39 out of a total of 59 persons removed in 2009, and 35 out of a total of 52 persons removed in 2010).

5.1.4. The European External Borders Fund (EBF) and Luxembourg

The pluri-annual programme of implementation of the External Borders Fund (EBF) 2007-2013, adopted by the European Commission, was presented by Luxembourg on 18 December 2008. This Fund is one of the four financial instruments of the general programme "Solidarity and management of migratory flows" which encourages equal division between the Member States of the responsibilities arising from the establishment of integrated management of the external borders of the EU, and implementation of Community policies regarding asylum and immigration. The Fund therefore creates a financial support mechanism for the Member States 253 Ministerial point of view, 07/07/2011, lines 251-254: "Ok, we have this directive that we’re going to transpose at the end of the year in the coming months. But it has to be said that we already have a clause in our legislation on immigration. So we already have penalties. In fact, we transpose something at the margin which we complete then we already have it.

which bear a long-lasting and heavy financial load linked to the implementation of common standards as regards control and surveillance of external borders. For its 2007-2013 pluri-annual programme, Luxembourg decided to implement four of the five EBF objectives:

1. To undertake gradual implementation of the common system of integrated management of the borders.
2. Support for issuing visas and the fight against irregular immigration by the consular departments of the Member States in third-countries.
3. Implementation of the computer systems required by the Community regulation regarding external borders and visas (VIS and SIS).
4. Application of the Community regulations regarding external borders and visas, and in particular the Schengen Border Code of the European Code on Visas. These objectives were selected according to the immediate and priority requirements regarding control at Luxembourg’s external borders:

1. Purchase of equipment enabling to detect fake travel documents and falsified documents;
2. Improvement of the conditions of issuing visas;
3. Necessity to adapt the control devices and the computer systems in order to make them compatible with the statutory requirements imposed by implementation of the SIS and the VIS;
4. Training of the personnel responsible for border control.

Action projects which are the subject of financing by the EBF programme are submitted to the General Management of the Police and to the Justice Ministry for agreement. In practice, the responsibility of integrally managing the Fund and putting the actions into application is that of the Grand Ducal Police.

In more detail and for the year 2007, the following actions were retained:

- Extension of the SIS for integration of the new Member States (SISone4all).

259 1. To undertake gradual implementation of the common system of integrated management of the borders. 2. Support for issuing visas and the fight against irregular immigration by the consular departments of the Member States in third-countries. 3. Implementation of the the computer systems required by the Community regulation regarding external borders and visas (VIS and SIS). 4. Application of the Community regulations regarding external borders and visas, and in particular the Schengen Border Code of the European Code on Visas.
This action falls within implementation of the SISone4all. The aim of this action was to prepare extension of the SIS in order to integrate the nine new Member States within the SISone4all framework. The works undertaken within this context essentially consisted of restructuration of the database and modification of the programmes enabling the presentation of data, adaptation of the search screens and consultation for the SIRENE bureau and the end-users. The quantified expected results and indicators stipulated by this action were initially access to alerts and data from the nine new Member countries and secondly the increase of positive hits.

For the year 2008, the following actions were retained:

- Development and installation of programmes for reading the data supplied by the document readers at Luxembourg airport.

This adaptation was deemed necessary in order to avoid border guards having to manually input the information contained in the travel documents presented to them in order to consult the SIS database.

Following this adaptation, the travel document is then scanned and the national SIS database is automatically consulted. The information is sent instantaneously to the user with negative or positive results for the categories of information concerned.

The works consisted of computer services (development and purchase of software) to extract the data from the document reader and present the results to the end-user. This enables to propose an integrated solution for the end-user who no longer has to input any information manually and accelerates control of passengers at the same time.

The quantified expected results are connected initially to the increase in the number of hits and to the quality of the responses by the deletion of manual input errors and secondly reduction of the waiting time for passengers checked at the external border.

For the year 2009, the following actions were retained:

261 Costs: 61,487€ with a Community subsidy of 75%.
263 Costs: 58,440€ with a Community subsidy of 75%. See the reference above.
Installation of document readers at Luxembourg Airport connected to SIS.

This action was rendered necessary in order to fit all of the border control counters installed in Terminal A of Luxembourg Airport with a document reader complying with the Schengen Borders Code.

Although the former terminal had 3 operational counters, i.e. two counters in arrivals and one counter in departures; with the opening of the new terminal, this number increased to 3 counters in arrivals, 3 counters in departures and 2 transit counters available to the Grand Ducal Police. To ensure verification of documents complying with the Schengen Borders Code "SBC" and to undertake a control at the border complying with all of the European clauses in force, these new counters must be fitted with a document reader. As occupation of all the counters (with border guards) is indispensable for the future in order to reduce in particular passengers’ waiting time, the Grand Ducal Police at the airport needed 5 new additional document readers, purchased from the "Bundesdruckerei" in Germany enabling to verify the following details:

- reading of the MRZ (machine readable zone);
- reading of the integrated chip and its contents;
- comparison of the contents of the integrated chip with the data written on the travel document;
- use of different lights to analyse the security elements: normal, infrared and ultraviolet;
- comparison of the document with different SIS and INTERPOL databases.

The new document readers enable moreover to avoid the border guards having to manually input the information contained in the travel documents while consulting the SIS database. Once the travel document is scanned, the SIS and INTERPOL databases are automatically consulted and the information is sent instantaneously to the border guard with the negative or positive results for the information categories concerned.

For the year 2010, the following actions were retained:

- Putting into application a portable digital fingerprint reader connected to SIS, AFIS and VIS

Although it was not scheduled in the 2007-2013 pluri-annual programme, this project was considered a priority by the General Management of the Grand Ducal Police in order to supply the ground units and more particularly the Section for Foreigners of the Criminal Police Department (SPJ) with an effective tool with state-of-the-art technology, to fight irregular immigration and trafficking in human beings. Actually, the purchase of a mobile terminal enables members of the police force to undertake verifications of identification and authentication on the ground. Protected in a case, this device can be easily transported and moved by the forces of order and may as a result be used during controls in cafes, restaurants, supper clubs, construction sites, bus stations, railway stations and in the lobby of the airport terminal building. These controls focus mainly on irregular immigration, the fight against trafficking in human beings and travel documents fraud. In more concrete terms, the mobile stations comprise a portable PC fitted with different software applications, terminals for inputting digital fingerprints and/or portraits. The device enable searches in large-scale biometric databases like AFIS ("Automated Fingerprint Identification System"), SIS and VIS to be undertaken, and to use different biometric methods (digital fingerprints or portraits) depending on the data available to provide the best identification results.

The mobile computer enables the contact details and digital fingerprints of a person on the ground to be captured and to communicate with AFIS.

With regards to the E-passport comprising biometric data, the system enables members of the Grand Ducal Police to conduct identification searches in order to eliminate multiple applications by international protection seekers or refugees complying with the Dublin convention based on the "Eurodac" system. Likewise it is possible to ensure that the person who is checked is not listed in a list of wanted or disappeared persons. The primary objective is to ensure that the holder of the document is indeed the person s/he claims to be. As regards biometric visas, the new system enables to input digital fingerprints of the person checked and to compare them with the data in the VIS. This procedure enables to verify that the person concerned is authorised to hold a VISA in his/her passport.
Firstly, it is necessary to mention that the statistics available in Luxembourg relating to irregular migration are very limited and partial. At times, differences can be observed between the figures exist between the different bodies, whereas they are supposed to cover the same situation. On one hand, the sensitive nature of the subject of irregular migration, and on the other, the "clandestine" status of the persons concerned means that irregular migration widely escapes conventional data collection methods. People in an irregular situation who have never presented themselves to the authorities are not recorded in the official administrative registers like migrants receiving a residence permit\textsuperscript{267}. As a result, public registers in no case enable to determine the total number of illegally staying in Luxembourg.

In addition, in Luxembourg, no centralised practice of collection and processing of data exist with regards to statistics on migration, with the exception of statistics on the working population, a task which is under the responsibility of STATEC\textsuperscript{268}. However STATEC, which receives data from the administrations, does not include migrants in an irregular situation as they are not listed anywhere. Collection of figures relating to various aspects of migration is done by numerous institutions, in accordance with their mandate. In cases where the raw figures (e.g. on apprehensions) are collected by one actor (the police), the responsibility of follow-up (process, final decision) falls on another actor (the Directorate of Immigration). Different administrations intervene at the level of control of different situations of irregularity, particularly as regards to work, without which all of the figures on offences observed within the scope of these actions are centralised, processed and compiled. At the same time, a lack of coordination between different institutions may hinder the flow of information. The same concern applies to the breakdown of figures. While the total figures are sometimes available, often breakdown by gender, age, nationality or country of origin is missing.

As mentioned in the introductory chapter, situations of irregularity can be grouped into two main categories, which themselves can be sub-divided into sub-groups:

a) irregular or undocumented persons, i.e. people who have no residence permit and who have never been registered with the national institutions as well as person who have no residence authorisation or residence permit and/or work permit while being registered with Social Security;

\textsuperscript{267} IOM, Migrations and statistical data, New challenges, \url{http://www.iom.int/jahia/Jahia/developing-migration-policy/new-challenges/lang/fr}. For example, data on applications and allocation of residence permits, applications for international protection, figures on cross-border commuters etc.

\textsuperscript{268} Statistics of the population in general and the labour market are available at the STATEC website. See \url{http://www.statistiques.public.lu/fr/population-emploi/index.html}
b) persons who legally entered the country but who find themselves in an irregular situation in Luxembourg for various reasons (they have exceeded the time of stay authorised by their visa, or if they are exempt from a visa obligation, they have decided to stay beyond the legal stay duration of three months, or even they remained in the country without their residence permit being renewed for one reason or another, etc.)

A particular group is comprised of rejected international protection applicants. Failure to obtain an authorisation to stay or a residence permit, for example for humanitarian reasons, rejected persons are considered legally as persons without the right of stay. As mentioned on several occasions in this study, the various migratory routes of persons (irregular/regular entry, then introduction or not of an application for international protection) may cross and do not often enable a clear differentiation between persons in an irregular situation and rejected international protection seekers. The same person may even have a route scattered with different situations of irregularities; as is the case for example of an applicant refused international protection, who remained initially in the country without the right of stay before being removed from the territory and who then returns clandestinely to Luxembourg without making him/herself known to the authorities.

The problem of differentiation is also illustrated with regards to removals. Although the Directorate of Immigration holds statistics relating to decisions to grant or refuse applications for international protection (number of persons refused, by country of origin and gender), the statistics relating to removals make no distinction between migrants in an irregular situation and applicants for international protection rejected.269

6.1.1. Removals and voluntary returns

The table below gives information on the total number of persons removed from Luxembourg, by country of origin, for the period between 2005 and 2010. We note that certain nationalities appear regularly in these data: persons native of the Balkan countries (Kosovo, Montenegro, Albania, Serbia) occupy the first positions, followed by Nigerians, Brazilians and Belarusians.

The graph below shows the evolution of removals from 2005 to 2010:

269 See Annex.
When we make the comparison between voluntary returns and forced returns (including returns after transit through the detention centre), we observe that Luxembourg’s policy in terms of removals gives priority to voluntary returns, particularly since the signing of the agreement between the Directorate of Immigration and IOM in 2008. It must however be specified that data on forced returns with passage through the detention centre are not available for the years 2005 to 2008, which is illustrated on the graph by red columns with zero value.

In 2009, IOM assisted 36 persons during their removal, a figure which tripled the following year (103 persons in 2010) which represents a proportion of 51% compared with the total number of removals. This increase is explained, as we have already specified above by the fact that the first agreement between the government and the IOM which covered the year 2009, was focused only on Kosovar nationals refused international protection, whereas since renewal of the agreement, all migrants in an irregular situation can receive this assistance with voluntary return, independently of their country of origin.

6.1.2. Refusal of entry

Luxembourg Airport being the sole external border and Luxembourg not being a HUB (Hub Airport\textsuperscript{270}) or connection platform, the quantity of flights from third-countries is very reduced and therefore also the number of third-country nationals. To this is added the lack of reliable data on the exact number of controls focusing on third-country nationals. The statistics provided by the SCA include under the heading entitled "passengers outside of Schengen", nationals of EU Member States that are not part of the Schengen Area (the United Kingdom, Ireland, Romania, and Bulgaria).

By analysing the following table, it appears that the percentage of passengers outside the Schengen Area represents nearly a third of the total number of passengers (except for 2004 where the latter represented a rate of 20.3%) who transit annually via Luxembourg International Airport.

The table also enables to observe that the number of falsifications/counterfeiting of documents reduced between 2004 and 2008 (they went from 19 in 2004 to 9 in 2007) and that the number of refusals clearly reduced since 2005 (they went from 55 in 2005 to 13 in 2007). An attempt at explanation of these figures could be that migrants supplied with false documents use other migratory routes.

The figures are not always consistent however. We therefore see data coming from the MAE which does not correspond to the data from the Grand Ducal Police.

\textsuperscript{270} The term hub covers two concepts: 1) administrative and technical, this is an airport or a company concentrated for the most part on its management activities and where it undertakes maintenance of its planes; 2) commercial, this is the principal destination airport of its flights and therefore a connection platform. For this study the second concept is the right one.

\textsuperscript{271} Data for the whole of 2008 and 2009 are not available.
The number of refusals of entry, according to the data given by the MAE was 7 and 8 for the years 2006 and 2007 respectively. By contrast, the statistics given by the police for the same years are 14 and 9 respectively. These differences could be explained by the fact that the former law of immigration must be taken into consideration in its Article 12, it stipulated that foreigners could "be removed from the territory by public force, with no other form of procedure than the simple observation of the fact by a report to be sent to the Minister with Immigration and Asylum as part of his/her duties".

The reasons for refusal of entry were based firstly on non-possession of a visa or an authorisation to stay (4 in 2007 and 3 in 2008) and then on the lack of sufficient means of subsistence (1 case in 2008).

It is important to point out that the number of removals from the territory greatly reduced since the entry into force of the Law of 29 August 2008, because the procedure of removal from the territory is stricter and the police do not have the same discretionary power that it had previously.

Regarding the second reason (lack of means of subsistence), there are no indications relating to evaluation of means of subsistence. As a result, this decision remains entirely at the discretion of the police authority on shift at the time of the evaluation.\(^{273}\).

As to the nationalities of the persons concerned by the decisions of refusal of entry, it is difficult to establish any conclusion as the figures are so low and the origins are different. In 2007, nationals

Likewise the Modified law of 29 August 2008 in its Article 34(3) requires the person wishing to stay in Luxembourg to justify sufficient personal resources, for the envisaged duration of stay as well as for the return to the country of origin, without for all that giving an indication of the specific amount. As illustrated by the table above, the number of orders of refusal of entry and of stay decreased since 2005. The number fell by 58\%, from 431 in 2005 to 183 in 2009. These figures represent only refusals of entry and of stay followed by an order to leave the territory relating to third-country nationals. The number of deportation orders also decreased, going from 27 in 2005 to 2 in 2008.

The last column in the table shows the number of persons subject to a detention order by the government (placed in detention). It is difficult to interpret these data, as being subject to a detention order may involve various situations: this could be persons subject to a detention order to be removed or those of persons subject to a detention order by the Parquet General (Public Prosecutor) as they had committed an offence\textsuperscript{276}. No information has been found as to the significance of this column in the MAE reports.

The following table gives us information on the principal nationalities that have experienced the largest number of refusals of entry and of stay combined with an order to leave the territory for the year 2009. The majority of these persons (except for the Brazilians) come from the Balkans and the African continent.

6.1.3. Persons arrested on the territory for irregular stay

The number of third-country nationals arrested on the territory for irregular stay is very low compared to the number of irregulars approached by government civil servants and associations277. In 2007, the authorities recorded 202 persons in an irregular situation, 162 persons in 2008 and 260 in 2009. The annual variations rely for the most part on routine or random controls conducted by the Police on foreigners and the Grand Ducal Police.

It is important to point out that the great majority of persons in an irregular situation arrested are mainly men (for example in 2009 of the 260 persons arrested there were 196 men, which is 75.4%). The majority of persons arrested, both sexes combined, are rather young adults aged between 18 and

The fact that the number of persons who receive an order to leave the territory does not coincide with the number of persons effectively returned, is explained in part by the fact that the removal procedure is not automatic, particularly due to the procedural guarantees, but also certainly because a certain number of them "escape" the authorities after having received the order to leave the territory. The table below shows us that the total number of persons returned was 172 in 2007, 142 in 2008 and 94 in 2009\(^{278}\).

With regards to the nationality of the persons being the subject of the return, we logically see the same nationalities as in the table resuming the nationalities of persons with an order to leave the territory (see below): nationals of the Balkan countries (Kosovo, Montenegro, Albania), Nigerians and Brazilians, which shows nevertheless a certain consistency in this domain. We can still observe that Brazilian nationals went from 10th place in 2007 to 3rd place in 2009.

\(^{278}\) Figures for the year 2010 are not available on this date.
Rejected applicants for international protection constitute another category of persons without a right of stay. Following refusal of their application without obtaining another residence permit, these persons, if they do not leave the country thus become de facto migrants in an irregular situation\textsuperscript{279}. The data on the negative decisions on their application for international protection enables their number to be evaluated.

Since 2005 the number of rejected applications for international protection is on the decrease. In 2006 the number of third-country nationals who saw their application rejected went up to 507, a number which fell progressively to 425 in 2007, 339 in 2008 and 362 in 2009. An explanation informs of the reduction in applications for international protection up until the end of 2009. We must take into consideration that the number of applications for international protection went from 523 in 2006, to 426 in 2007, 463 in 2008, 505 in 2009 and increased significantly in 2010 to 786 (55.6\% compared to 2009). This situation can be explained by three phenomena: the economic crisis in general, elimination of visas for Serbian nationals from 17 December 2009 (the number of applications went from 17 in 2009 to 148 in 2010, i.e., an increase of 870.6\%) and the increase in the violence in Iraq (applications went from 65 to 95 – 46.1\%) and in Somalia (from 8 applications in 2009 to 30 in 2010)\textsuperscript{280}. From January 2011 the number of applications nevertheless experienced a spectacular increase, to the point that at the end of September 2011, 1586 applications had been \textsuperscript{279} 2006-2010 figures on applicants for international protection. Directorate of Immigration, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

\textsuperscript{280} These three nationalities represent 65\% of the total increase in applications for international protection. See table Evolution of asylum/international protection applicants by country of origin (applicant numbers) 2006-2010 by the Directorate of Immigration, Foreign Affairs Ministry. \url{http://www.mae.lu/fr/Site-MAE/Immigration/Chiffres-cles-en-matiere-d-asile} registered\textsuperscript{281}. That is to say, an increase of 101.8\% in 9 months compared with 2010. The vast majority of applications were submitted by nationals of the Republic of Serbia and the former Yugoslavian Republic of Macedonia. This increase is explained in part by the lifting of the visa requirement to enter the Schengen Area for these countries, but also by the economic conditions of the countries of origin and especially by the discriminations suffered by these persons in their country of origin. It must be specified that the great majority of applicants belong to minorities of their countries of origin, particularly the Roma community. The rates of recognition or non-recognition must also be put into relation with the region of origin of the international protection seekers.

We can conclude that there is no homogenous mechanism for gathering statistical information on all migrants in an irregular situation. It is clear that the clandestinity factor renders the task nearly impossible.

The government is aware of the extent of the phenomenon\textsuperscript{282}. The interviews conducted with different associations leave it to be believed however that the largest groups of migrants (in number) in an irregular situation are nationals of Cape Verde and Brazil\textsuperscript{283}. For the Cape Verdeans, family reunification plays an important role\textsuperscript{284}. This facilitates settlement and the search for work. Often Cape Verdean nationals emigrate with a tourist visa, and, the moment they arrive in Luxembourg, they make an application for family reunification. Brazilian nationals do not need a visa to enter the Schengen Area.\textsuperscript{285}.

With regards to the origin of the undocumented persons who made a regularisation application, the majority were natives of countries of the former Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (2041), followed by persons natives of Cape Verde (182), Albania (75), China (66), Bosnia-Herzegovina (67), Algeria (41), Poland (41), Macedonia (41) and Brazil (40).\textsuperscript{290}

The great majority of applicants and persons regularised were asylum applicants registered with and known to the authorities.

The majority of the decisions of refusal were justified by the insufficiency of means of subsistence assessed for residing in Luxembourg. This information is summarized in the table below.

After 2001, no regularisation operations of a collective nature were conducted by the government. On the other hand, regularisations on a case-by-case basis and based on the specified conditions were done by application of Article 89 of the Law of 29 August 2008.

So in 2009, the Minister of Immigration decided to regularise a certain number of rejected international protection applicants by granting them a provisional residence permit after obtaining a work permit. There were 35 cases in total, corresponding to 75 persons. These persons were able to demonstrate that, among other things, they had lived in Luxembourg for several years continuously.

7. CONCLUSIONS

This aim of this study is to analyse the phenomenon of irregular migration and more particularly the practical measures implemented to reduce it in Luxembourg. It has become clear, however, that various situations must be taken into account, following which a person may find him/herself in an irregular situation, and the close relationship which exists between the status of "irregular migrant" and the legislative policies and provisions of a Member State must be mentioned. Actually, it is the legislative and statutory conditions as well as the specific administrative practices which define situations of irregularity. Whereas politically, the difference is often made between certain situations of irregularity (e.g. differentiation between irregular persons who entered the territory irregularly and persons refused international protection), in practice, this differentiation often proves very difficult to maintain. There is no single "route to irregularity" and the tipping point between persons in a regular situation and persons in an irregular situation is often blurred. Let’s take by means of illustration applicants for international protection. During the procedure, the persons enjoy a particular legal status and a right of stay, whereas from the refusal of their application – failing obtaining another residence permit – the same people become irregular persons.

Concrete and global figures do not exist on the number of persons finding themselves in an irregular situation in Luxembourg. According to Ministerial estimates, the phenomenon has increased. Other figures available on persons refused, removals or even arrests or regularisations conducted in the past may therefore give a partial overview of the situation but do not enable conclusions to be drawn on the number of persons in an irregular situation. On the basis of figures on removal and work on the ground by various associations, the groups most involved in irregular stay in Luxembourg are nationals of Brazil, Cape Verde and Balkan nationals. According to the associations encountered, many persons who are nationals of Brazil and exempt from the visa obligation or nationals of Cape Verde subject to the visa obligation, initially enter Luxembourg legally but remain beyond the authorised period of stay of 3 months. Nationals of countries of the Balkans find themselves in another case scenario. As previously explained, often nationals from the Balkans submit an application for international protection, of which the chances of a positive decision from the authorities is practically nil. These persons may potentially find themselves in an irregular situation if they refuse to return to their country of origin after having been refused the right to asylum.

At the national level, the 2004-2009 governmental programme refers for the first time to (the fight against) irregular migration. At the time of this legislature, two laws connected with the issue raised came into force: on the one hand, the law of 29 August 2008 focusing on the free movement of persons and immigration redefining the entry and stay conditions, the conditions of removal from the territory, and transposing related EU directives; on the other, the law of 5 May 2006 relating to the right of asylum and to additional forms of protection transposing the European directives as regards asylum. National policy and legislation is thus closely linked to European policy. The 2009-2014 governmental programme continues with this approach by mentioning the close connection between the promotion and organisation of legal immigration and the effective fight against immigration and illegal work. The emphasis is placed on the development of a consistent return and in particular the promotion of voluntary returns. This political emphasis resulted in the approval of the Law of 1 July 2011 which modifies the two laws mentioned above. From the ministerial point of view, this law transposes the "return directive" and represents an indispensable element for the development of a genuine national policy on irregular migration. The detention of persons in an irregular situation remains a controversial subject. With the creation of the first Detention Centre in Luxembourg, independent from the penitentiary centre enclosure, there have been endless criticisms on the legitimacy, proportionality, conditions and duration of detention.

Like the Detention Centre, readmission agreements represent another element of national policy on coping with irregular migration. While Luxembourg has signed no bilateral readmission agreements, several agreements, negotiated either with the Benelux partners, or within the Schengen framework, are applicable in Luxembourg. These readmission agreements aim to facilitate the removal of irregular persons by defining the practical terms and conditions and the legal framework of the removal, but also the issue of travel documents. The signing of a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) between Luxembourg and Nigeria in a period when Luxembourg has experienced a great number of Nigerian nationals in an irregular situation, demonstrates moreover that even in the absence of a written readmission agreement, Luxembourg attempted cooperation with the authorities of the countries of origin concerned in order to cope with a concrete situation deemed problematic. The contacts with the authorities of Kosovo in order to organise return of Kosovar nationals may be mentioned.

Also, the inclusion of Serbia on the list of safe countries of origin, the re-establishment of the use of the accelerated procedure (which already existed) constitutes a political response and resources for containing “migratory flows”, just as at the same time as talks with the Serbian authorities.

While national policy focused on the return of persons, regularisation remains a limited alternative for a person who finds him/herself in an irregular situation and who wishes to get out of the irregularity. The national legislation stipulates the possibility for the Minister in charge of immigration to grant a residence permit as a special case to persons residing without authorisation in Luxembourg if they fulfil well-defined conditions. However, in practice, the clauses of Article 89 prove difficult to apply and the conditions for regularisation come into contradiction with other provisions, in particular those focusing on the fight against illegal work. Actually, Article 89 requires proof of residence and of occupation in Luxembourg. However, providing this proof is at least equivalent to acknowledging the existence of illegal work and encouraging it to a certain extent. Over and above the provisions of Article 89, regularisations are possible in highly exceptional cases, linked to very serious humanitarian circumstances or to the family situation of the person concerned. Granting an autonomous residence permit or another authorisation conferring a right of stay for humanitarian or other reasons to a national residing without authorisation (residence permit for private reasons), is stipulated and the conditions of granting the authorisation have been relaxed with the modification of the law on the free movement of persons and immigration.

Moreover, the legislation stipulates alternatives for persons who for (well-defined) certain reasons cannot be returned: suspension of removal for medical reasons (necessitating medical treatment which cannot be undertaken in the country of return) and postponement of removal (replacing the measure of tolerance) which can be granted in situations where physical execution of the removal proves impossible due to circumstances of fact.

As regards practical measures implemented to reduce irregular migration, different measures are applied at the various stages of the irregular route.

As Luxembourg has no external borders with the exception of its airport and only has a limited diplomatic network, the country puts the emphasis on European cooperation and assumes its Community responsibility by contributing human, material and financial resources to FRONTEX operations.

In terms of measures, Luxembourg is concentrating on several initiatives and programmes which focus on the prevention of irregular migration, in particular by making available information on opportunities and constraints as well as on the legal framework of immigration to Luxembourg.

Control of persons, with the objective of identifying and detecting irregular migrants, is the responsibility of the Police Airport Control Unit. Systematic controls, undertaken at border passage points, are done in compliance with the Schengen Borders Code and comprise numerous procedures of verification of travel documents, consultation of computer data and assessment of travellers. To enable acquisition and monitoring of the necessary skills, the members of the UCPA take part in various training courses, organised at the national and international level, as regards border control.

Controls conducted on Luxembourg territory as regards irregular migration and more particularly the fight against illegal work, are the responsibility of the Labour Inspectorate (ITM) in collaboration with the Grand Ducal Police. The ITM must ensure that the standards relating to clandestine or illegal work are respected including clauses on work permits for third-country nationals from a Member State of the European Economic Area. In the period 2007-2010, the Inspectorate organised several high-impact actions on work sites and in companies. Moreover no information on the follow-up of the reports was available.

Lastly, measures can be put in place to counter irregular migration, however none of these measures will be sufficient to cope with the determination of those who wish to or who are even obliged to leave their country of origin. Irregular migrants that the legislative provisions declare as such and produce are alone
